DAN BEARD HAILS DRY LAW AS GREAT ACHIEVEMENT

Youth of Today Finer Because of Prohibition, Founder of Boy Scouts Declares

BY FRANK S. MEAD
(Copyright, 1930, by Christian Herald)

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—We drove an even hundred miles before breakfast to talk with Daniel Carter Beard. We had to, for this 80-year-old founder of the Boy Scouts of America has a habit, when summer rolls around, of hiding himself away from the rest of us in the heart of a deep and glorious Pennsylvania forest. There, at the end of a long and winding country lane he runs "The Dan Beard Outdoor School for Boys."

Boys have gone down that winding lane to Dan Beard, generations back, then grown to manhood, and sent their children there. Senators, governors, bishops, honored men in every walk of life, are proud to give their sons year after year, into the careful molding hand of "Uncle Dan." The Pinchots and the Du Ponts have been there. The explorer Schackleton rose at a banquet at the Hotel Astor to exclaim: "Dan Beard is the man who kindled in me the love of out-of-door adventure." One boy went from the camp to be a Rhodes scholar at Oxford; another to stand at the top of his class at West Point; a third is now military aide to the President. The man may be right who said that "Dan Beard has done more to instil the virtues of good citizenship in young America than any other man in the country."

We first saw him as he came swinging down the road to greet us. He has seen eighty summers and sixteen Presidents come and go, but he is not old. He walked toward us quickly like a boy. The old five-gallon sombrero that he wore failed to shadow his snapping, twinkling boyish-blue eyes. We knew each other before a word was spoken.

"Mr. Beard?"

"Yes. Glad you've come. Come on up to the cabin porch, and sit down."

Chipmunks ran chattering at our feet, unafraid. A symphony of birds in the pines overhead made us few as though we were holding our conversation in a church. We talked of boys and prohibition.

"Prohibition? Yes, sir. I'm for it. Finest thing that ever happened to us. No, I haven't always been a prohibitionist, or even a teetotaler. I was brought up in a day and in a section of the country where such a thing was unheard of; the Old South. But I never cared for the stuff. I've always been interested in the building of fine minds in sound bodies, and that don't mean a bit. I'm a prohibitionist now, all right. I think most people are, at heart. My work has taken me a great deal into the club life of the country, speaking at banquets, being entertained, and all that. A prominent club man said to me once at

CHURCHES IN MEXICO FACE LOSS

Government Moves to Nationalize Property of Protestant Bodies

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 6.—Protestant church circles here are in a state of agitation tonight following a notice that the government has filed a petition in the Sixth District Court to nationalize all property of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Mexico. In Mexico City alone fourteen buildings of the Methodist Church will become the property of Mexico, if the petition is granted.

This is understood to be the first step toward nationalizing property of all Protestant churches in Mexico. The government hopes to put them on the same basis as the Catholic Church, the property of which is considered owned by the government.

The petition was filed on the order of the Attorney-General and it stated the Christian Science and other Protestant churches will face identical action as soon as the present case is disposed of.

A nation-wide conference of the Methodist Church was called for here on the 16th inst. some time ago. The purpose of the conference is to inaugurate "the Methodist Church of Mexico," which will separate from the mother church in the United States, working in co-operation with it.

Temblor Causes Panic in Spain

MURCIA (Spain) Sept. 6. (AP)—A severe earthquake shook this city at 7 o'clock this morning. It was the strih and worst quake felt here in the last few days.

No damage was reported but the population was thrown into panic.

FRENCH AIR HEROES TO TAKE REST

Coste and Bellonte still Catch Up on Sleep Before Flying to Washington

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Dieudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte, tired and bedraggled, but $10,000 richer than when they took off from Long Island last Thursday on their flight to Dallas, Tex., to qualify for the Easterwood prize, returned to New York today.

They asked for only one thing on their arrival at Valley Stream after a six and a half-hour flight from Louisville today, and that was rest and a chance to sleep.

Accordingly, all engagements for tonight and tomorrow were canceled and they retired to their suite in a Park-avenue hotel, where they said they will stay until tomorrow afternoon when they leave for Washington to receive a welcome from President Hoover.

Tired as they were, they swung their transoceanic Question Mark north up the Hudson when they reached the Statute of Liberty, in New York Harbor, this afternoon and paid a flying visit to the Military Academy at West Point.

Swooping low over the parade ground they unloosed a cloud of small American flags which fluttered down to the green field as the red plane swooped and dipped its wings in salute.

FLYERS HONORED BY FRENCH CABINET

PARIS, Sept. 6. (AP)—The Cabinet today officially honored Capt. Dieudonne Coste and his flying mate, Maurice Bellonte, and the Weather Bureau expert who spent months working out the trans-Atlantic weather problem, by approving their promotion in the Legion of Honor.

Coste will be made a commander. Bellonte will be raised to officer and Meteorologist Viaut will be given the initial rank of chevalier.

Norris Reports Campaign Costs

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—A statement of the primary campaign expenses of Senator Norris, Republican, Nebraska, submitted today to the Senate Campaign Funds Investigating Committee, showed Senator Cutting, Republican, New Mexico, and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot contributed $1000 each of the $2920 total.

The statement, made by J. P. Robertson, Norris's manager, said $2620.18 was spent.

Vandals Wreck Film Projector

CHICO, Sept. 6. (AP) — Vandals wrecked a sound projection machine and placed an odor bomb in the ventilating system of the Senator Theater here, forcing the management to abandon today's matinee.

The theater is owned by the T. & D. Enterprises, Jr., Ind., which is having trouble with operators and stage hands unions.

NIGHT GAMES

Reports of night baseball games appear on Page 8 of this section.

Mussolini Plot Ringleaders Die by Firing Squad

TRIESTE (Italy) Sept. 6. (AP)—Four of eighteen Jugo-Slavians who have been on trial for acts of terrorism were executed by a firing squad today.

The four were Zvonimir Miletic, 24 years of age; Fran Marusic, 26; Petar Gracic, 25, and Luigi Valenti, 23.

Government prosecutors contended that Marusic was the leader of the band and that he and Luigi Vasenti were connected with a plot to assassinate Premier Mussolini by planting a bomb in his motor car.

The defendants were charged with thirteen murders, thirty-one attempted murders, bombings and other outrages.

Kansas Storms Halt Airplanes

WICHITA (Kan.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Transcontinental airplane passenger service was halted tonight in this section by storms between Wichita and Kansas City and between Wichita and Waynoka, Okla. Three trimotored airplanes rested for the night at the Municipal Airport here and their passengers went to hotels. A fourth plane carrying twelve passengers was forced to land at Anthony Kan., for the night.

Girl Cuts off Her Right Arm

MONTEREY, Sept. 6. (AP)—Because she thought her arm destined to kill some one Miss Elta Fickle, 20 years of age, placed her right arm under the wheels of a Southern Pacific train at Pacific Grove today, severing it just below the elbow.

She said her father lives in Visalia.

Allen to Face Major Operation

WICHITA (Kan.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Senator Allen will undergo a major operation Tuesday at Johns-Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, his physicians said today.

A minor operation performed Monday has failed to relieve a glandular disorder as expected, it was said. The Senator is reported suffering considerable pain.

Chicago-Berlin Angeleno's Aim

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Roy W. Ammel of Los Angeles arrived here today after a flight by easy stages from Albuquerque, N. M., and announced he will start as soon as conditions permit on a nonstop flight to Berlin.

If conditions are not favorable when he reaches New York, he said, he will stop there and try to reach Paris or Berlin on his next hop.

Diver Finds Gem on Floor of Bay

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Theodore Wick, marine diver, qualified today as a likely candidate for the job of finding the needle in the haystack.

Wick recovered a $1500 diamond ring from the floor of the bay where it was lost Friday night by Frank F. Herman, yachtsman.

TWO SHOT IN SPANISH STRIKE RIOT

Mounted Police Patrol Streets of San Sebastian; King Arrives at Scene

SAN SEBASTIAN (Spain) Sept. 6. (AP)—Two strikers were wounded, one seriously, when police fired into mobs of rioters on the streets here today.

Efforts to negotiate a truce in the general strike declared last night failed and all business houses in the city closed. The residents became panicky, and virtual martial law prevails.

Mounted police and civil guards patrolled the streets. Many were arrested, and some of the prisoners' names were kept secret.

King Alfonso arrived here by automobile despite efforts to dissuade him. When told that a general strike had been declared here, and that he had best keep away, the King grinned at his advisers.

"Vamose" (go away) he ordered. "I am scheduled to go to San Sebastian and I go to San Sebastian."

The King and the royal family have been at Bilbao.

A strike committee attempting negotiations with municipal authorities quit its efforts when the riot started. Observers said the situation tonight is uncertain, and contains an element of danger.

REDS BLOCK SALVATION ARMY AID

Australian Unemployed Urged to Boycott Free Soup Kitchens

ADELAIDE (Australia) Sept. 6. (AP)—Communists, most of them foreigners, carrying on an active agitation among the unemployed here, induced them to boycott a free lunch counter and soup kitchen established by the Salvation Army.

The Communists told the hungry men that it was the duty of the government, and not the Salvation Army, to feed them.

When the soup kitchen opened the agitators blocked the door and prevented anyone from entering, saying that the soup and eats had been declared "black."

Gun Plan Theft Causes Furore

GENEVA, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—A sensation was caused in Swiss military circles here by the theft of the plans for a new type of machine gun which was to be constructed secretly at the government factory near Zurich. In recent tests by experts it gave every satisfaction.

Inquiry proved that the plans had been stolen and sold for a large sum to some foreign power, believed by many to be Italy, by two factory workers, who have been arrested and will be tried for high treason.

NOTED SCOTCH PAINTER DIES

CROWMORE (Dumbartonshire, Scotland) Sept. 6. (AP)—Sir James Guthrie, widely known Scottish painter, died here today.

REVOLUTION IN ARGENTINA WINS IN ORGY OF BLOOD

Scores Killed and 1200 Wounded as Army Junta Seizes Capital; Fire and Sword Rule City

BUENOS AIRES, Sept 6. (AP)—The government announced tonight that President Yrigoyen, whose government was overthrown by a revolt tonight, had been arrested and was confined in the barracks of the Seventh Infantry at La Plata. Previously the former President had handed in his resignation and it was reported that he was in very poor health.

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—An infuriated mob at a late hour tonight was sacking the house of former President Yrigoyen, having already set fire to Yrigoyenist Deputy Scarlatto's house, which is opposite that of Yrigoyen. Troops are en route to restore order.

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—The revolution in Argentina has succeeded. One hundred and sixty dead and some 1200 wounded, buildings in flames, mobs gone wild in the nation's capital and a President in flight give bloody testimony to the fact that the suppressed anger of these Latins has broken out in open rebellion with its consequent slaughter.

The army is in control. A military junta headed by Gen. Jose Evaristo Uriburu has been installed in Government House, replacing the Cabinet which resigned in haste on the disappearance of the chief executive, Hipolito Yrigoyen.

WILD DISORDER

The wildest disorder reigned in the capital this afternoon, and continues tonight. The police, while for a time remained faithful to the government, charged crowds with drawn sabers. After they had gone over to the rebel cause, a few remaining Yrigoyenists battled the military cadets in desultory fashion in outlying parts of the city.

Two newspaper plants were stormed by the crowds and burned without the firemen lifting a finger to save the blazing structures, even though the flames imperiled nearby bank buildings.

The first paper to be attacked was La Epoca, a radical organ in one of the principal thoroughfares down which the revolting troops were marching with fixed bayonets on Government House. A body of men in La Epoca attempted to prevent the attack by turning machine guns on the crowd. The infuriated mob fired the premises and dragged from it busts of Yrigoyen which were decapitated.

NEWSPAPER WRECKED

Later the populace attacked a government newspaper, La Calle, smashed its machinery and furniture and set fire to the plant. Again the firemen refused to intervene.

A crowd of 30,000 people, cheering wildly, greeted the revolutionary troops and escorted them to the government house. As the troops proceeded, they executed civic pleasantries on their line of march. The inhabitants of houses on the line of march signified their approval of the revolution by hurling from windows pictures of Yrigoyen, which crashed on to the pavements and were destroyed by the crowds.

The whereabouts of Yrigoyen and Dr. Enrique V. Martinez, to whom Yrigoyen had handed over the executive power yesterday, are unknown. It is reported that Yrigoyen fled in an ambulance with a woman relative, but his whereabouts could not be ascertained. Some reports said that he was going to try to escape abroad, others that he had taken refuge on the cruiser Constitucion. This was disputed, however, since the navy is notoriously anti-Yrigoyenist, although it abstained from taking part in today's revolution. It is possible that the navy offered Yrigoyen refuge, nevertheless, on humanitarian grounds, to save him from the wrath of the people.

CROWDS RUN WILD

Incendiarism was rampant tonight in several quarters. It was said repair had set fire to El Molino, a fashionable tea shop among other buildings, because some shots were fired from its upper windows.

As darkness set in tonight fighting continued in the principal streets of the city and it was said the crowds were completely out of hand. The first act of the head of the new government, Gen. Uriburu, was to issue a decree which, while it rescinded the order of martial law made last night, and lifted the censorship, urged the populace to preserve order and respect life and property. The decree declared that any one caught infringing the order would be tried by court-martial and shot immediately if found guilty.

Gen. Uriburu, long feared in the Yrigoyen camp, only succeeded in joining the revolution today by an ingenious ruse. He escaped the surveillance of Yrigoyen's police this morning to join his troops at Campo de Mao at dawn by leaving his house rolled up in a mattress in a furniture van that had been hired to move his household goods to

LEVIATHAN RUNS WILD IN HUDSON

Barges Rammed When Strong Tide Takes Vessel Suddenly Out of Course

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—The liner Leviathan, swung out of her course by a strong tide, rammed two barges in the Hudson River as she departed for Europe today with 538 passengers. The liner was undamaged and continued to sea.

One of the barges, fouled by the port anchor of the liner, was dragged several hundred feet down the river, overturned and sunk. Three men leaped to safety from the two barges, owned by the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

The incident is expected to give Commodore Harold Cunningham a new point in his argument with the Pilots' Association of New York as to who should pilot the ship in and out of the harbor.

Commodore Cunningham for several years had used only William McLaughlin, who, he said, was the only man competent to handle the largest thing afloat, with her draft of nearly 32 feet, in the waters of New York Harbor.

This summer, when the association assigned another pilot to the task, the commodore brought the ship in himself as he is qualified to do. He continued this procedure each time a strange pilot was assigned. After several conferences he made peace with the association and since August 1 has accepted the pilot assigned.

Pilot Frank D. Wall was on the bridge today when the accident occurred.

Christian Arab Killed in Riot with Moslems

JERUSALEM, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) Rioting occurred today at Haifa between the Christian Arabs and the Moslems, resulting in the killing of a Christian Arab, the editor of a local paper, and the wounding of six Christian Arabs. One Moslem was killed.

The riots are accumulation of wrangling which has continued for a week in regard to the Christian Arabs' claim to a cemetery in which the British buried a number of Christians during the war. The Moslems since have claimed the cemetery and are burying Moslems there.

The government is arbitrating the question, but while awaiting the results of this, the authorities fear further violence.

Shot Kills Baby Riding in Auto

HAZARD (Ky.) Sept. 6. (AP)—The 20-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Maggard of Hard Burley died in a hospital here tonight of a bullet wound received while riding with her parents in an automobile. B. E. Hill, Chief of the Hazard Fire Department, who has a special duty job as a speed officer, was charged with the shooting.

Deputy Jailer Luther Combs said he understood Hill said he fired to frighten the Maggards to a stop and had no intention of hitting anyone in the car.

GOVERNOR HELD KIDNAPER

Louisiana Executive and Other Officials Accused of Abducting Two Wards of Court

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 6. (AP)—Gov. Huey P. Long, Dist.-Atty. John E. Fleury, of Jefferson Parish, and six other State officers were charged with conspiring to kidnap Sam Irby and James Terrell while they were wards of the District Court of East Baton Rouge, in a writ of habeas corpus filed today in the Federal court.

The writ, filed by Assistant Attorney-General Schowalter, demands the Sheriff deliver the two men in open court Monday. The writ makes the unqualified statement Irby and Terrell are confined in the Jefferson Parish Jail.

The men were seized in their hotel room in Shreveport Thursday by State officers and taken away in automobiles before they had an opportunity of carrying out their announced intention of filing suits charging slander against Gov. Long and O. K. Allen, chairman of the State Highway Commission. The whereabouts of the men remained a mystery until Gov. Long said in a political speech last night they were held in Jefferson Parish for investigation on charges of rifling official State records.

Irby appeared recently as a principal witness in an investigation of the affairs of the State Highway Commission.

SCOUT FOUNDER HAILS DRY LAW

Dan Beard Firm Believer in Success of Measure

Youth of Today Finer for Prohibition Era

"Wild Party, Hip-Flask" Talk Held Gross Libel

dinner: "Uncle Dan, I take a drink occasionally. But I know and you know that prohibition is the finest thing in the world for these kids of ours. When we older folks of Barleycorn die off, things will be a lot safer for them. I believe that, and I advocate it, wherever I go.

"I'M AN AMERICAN"

"I believe in it because I'm an American!" Never, till the day we die, shall we forget the way he said that. Mr. Beard was an intimate friend of Theodore Roosevelt (who also was something of an American) and he roared out that answer as gustily as Teddy would have roared it out: I'm an American. I believe in America, and in her institutions, and in her ability to show the way to every other nation on earth. And I will give my heart and my hand to anything that makes for a better America. I believe that prohibition is good; just that, in spite of all the wet propaganda calculated to make us think that conditions are worse than they were before we went dry."

"Why," he went on, sitting bolt-upright in his rustic chair; "Why, only the other day I was down here in all this rural section around these woods. When I was building these cabins, forty years ago, I had the time of my life keeping my workmen sober enough to do an honest day's work. Pay them for a day's work, and they were drunk for a week. Many's the night I've gone the length of this same road, picking up unconscious men all along it, and dragging them home to keep them from freezing to death. That hasn't happened in this country for years. Lots of these boys who come up to me for the summer have never seen a really intoxicated man.

SALOONS CHASED OUT

"Or if you city fellows want an example nearer home, listen; I remember walking down from Fifty-ninth street to the Grand Central, one day before the war, and counting nine saloons on one side of the street. Heaven only knows how many there were on the other side! How many will you find there now? Mr. Fort of New Jersey was right when he said that at least we've 'chased the saloon up the dark alleys and off the main streets.' No, I can't agree with the calamity howlers wh. claim we are all going to the dogs. It's a finer, cleaner America we're living in now, and it's a finer, cleaner American we're getting ready to run things when we're gone."

He couldn't get away from this "good American" business. Yet, as we talked the impression kept gaining on us that fine as that was, he was even more. Transcending his love of Americans is his love for boys. He has given his life to them; inevitably, we fell to talking about them.

"Are the boys of this generation as wild as those of yours?"

"BO" NOT WILD NOW

"Wild! Wild? We don't know what wild boys are, in these days. Why, when I was a boy in Kentucky, people thought that was something wrong with a boy if he hadn't been drunk by the time he was 15 years of age. Youngsters drank then as they'll never drink again. Out of all the crowd I ran with as a boy and as a young man, only a mere handful let booze alone. That handful still alive. The rest are—dead." He counted them off, or out, on his fingers. Jim, Bill, Tom and all the rest. Riotous Alexanders all, they died young.

"But—we hear so much of hip-flasks, and wild parties—"

"Hip-flasks! Who started at all that? Not the younger bunch, at all. That craze was started by a lot of men who thought more of profits than they did of boys. The minute prohibition went into effect, store windows put 'em out in front where the boys couldn't help seeing them. The hip-flask was commercialized to death, and youth was its victim.

"And this wild-party business; how many have you seen in the past year? I went to visit my son, last winter, at Syracuse University. We went to a party at one of the big hotels in town, and the place was jammed to the doors with students. All evening long, in all that crowd, I saw but one boy who gave any evidence whatever that he had been drinking. The rest of the crowd seemed ashamed of him; kept trying to hide him, or apologize for him. The wets have played up to this wild-party idea to a fare-you-well. But it's a false alarm. It isn't so. It is a false conception that will pass with all the rest of this post-war upheaval."

FALSE IDEA TO PASS

"How soon will it pass?"

He laughed. "Well, Henry George used to say that it took 100 years for an nation to recuperate from a war. But that's too liberal an estimate for this job. The next generation will see it through."

We asked him about the effect on a boy of seeing his parents drink in defiance of the law. "What's unusual about that?" he asked in return.

"They saw all that, and more, before prohibition came along. All a youngster had to do was to look under the swinging doors of a saloon, and he could see drinking under far worse conditions than prevail today. One would think that nobody defied the liquor laws in the old days. Why, Congress couldn't make laws fast enough for those fellows to break. And the laughable part of it is that they are the very crowd who, now are shouting loudest about 'educating youth to temperance.' Can you imagine what they'd educate youth to, if they got the chance? Here they are spending money like a lot of drunken sailors to get alcohol back again; do you think that once getting it back, they will educate people away from it? Not much.

How I Licked Wretched Old Age at 63

"I Quit Getting Up Nights . . . Banished Foot and Leg Pains . . . Got Rid of Rheumatic Pains and Constipation . . . Improved Embarrassing Health Faults . . . Found New Strength."

"At 61 I thought I was through. I feared old age, but it never occurred to me to actually fight back. I was only half-living, getting up nights . . . embarrassed in my own home . . . constipated . . . constantly tormented by pains and aches. At 62 my condition became almost intolerable. I had about given up hope when a doctor recommended your treatment. Then at 63, it seemed that I shook off 20 years almost over night."

FORTY — The Danger Age

These are the facts, just as I learned them. In 65% of all men, the vital prostate gland shows up soon after 40. No pain is experienced, but as this distressing condition continues, sciatica, backache, severe bladder weakness, constipation, etc., often develop.

PROSTATE TROUBLE

These are frequently the signs of prostate trouble. Now thousands suffer these handicaps needlessly! For a prominent American Scientist, after seven years of research, discovered a new, safe way to stimulate the prostate gland to normal health and activity in many cases. This new hygiene is worthy to be called a notable achievement of the age.

A NATIONAL INSTITUTION FOR MEN PAST 40

Its success has been startling, its growth rapid. This new hygiene is rapidly gaining in national prominence. The institution in Steubenville, O., has now reached large proportions. Scores and even hundreds of letters pour in every day, and in many cases, reported results have been little short of amazing. In case after case, men have reported that they have felt ten years younger in seven days. Now physicians in every part of the country are using and recommending this treatment.

Quick as is the response to this new hygiene, it is actually a pleasant, natural relaxation, involving no drugs, medicine, or electric rays whatever. The scientist explains this discovery and tells why many men are old at forty in a new book now sent free in 24-page, illustrated form. Every man past forty should know the true meaning of these frank facts. No cost or obligation is incurred. This book is entirely free. You should call, if possible, in person for your copy. If impossible to call, mail the coupon immediately, as the edition is limited.

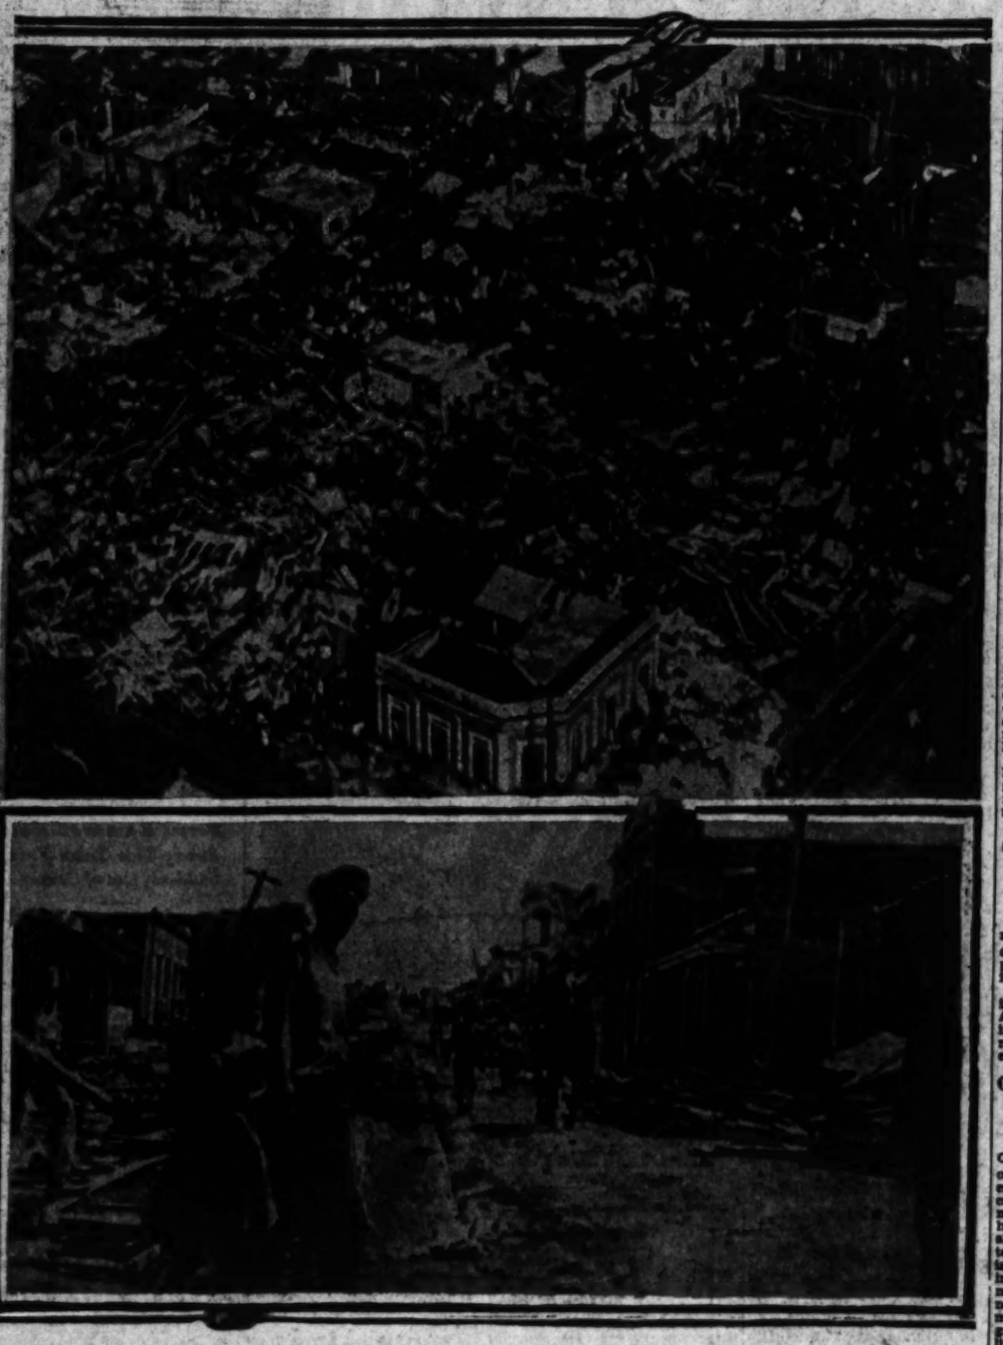
Where West Indian Hurricane Left Wake of Death



(A. P. telephotos)

Storm Deals $50,000,000 Damages

Upper photograph is a general view of Santo Domingo, taken after that city had been swept by the hurricane. Below is a street scene in the devastated city.

TROPIC STORM DEATHS MOUNT

pure water supply becomes hourly more pressing.

A squadron of six Cuban airplanes, bearing physicians and medical supplies, landed here this morning, and this afternoon the all-America cable ship All American arrived with a large supply of medicine and foodstuffs, and several doctors and nurses.

Their arrival brought new hope to the little body of local officials and physicians who have worked without rest for hours, their bodies a living barricade against the after-runner of the storm—disease.

BRIDGE TORN OUT

Several persons today won their way across the River Osama from Villa Duarte, spanning the swollen current on a cable as the bridge was torn away by the storm.

They reported 300 dead and 500 injured in the district of El Algibe, and 167 bodies already recovered in Villa Francisca.

Parties have penetrated an area of fifteen miles on every side of Santo Domingo and report all desolation. Roads, little more than trails in normal times, now are virtually impassable and the injured in outlying sections have little hope of receiving medical and surgical attention for days.

The storm not only virtually destroyed the city, but also ruined that upon which the country depends for existence—great stores of coffee, cacao and fruits, which had been prepared for exportation.

ADDITIONAL RELIEF ORDERED TO STRICKEN

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—Additional assistance was offered today to storm-swept Santo Domingo as American relief agencies speeded up their work and another Red Cross official prepared to visit the devastated area.

Red Cross officers continued planning relief work, and Ernest J. Swift, acting director of the organization's insular and foreign operations, announced he will go to Santo Domingo City by rail and air as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, Surgeon - General Hugh S. Cumming promised all possible assistance in preventing an aftermath of epidemic. The Pan-American Union, Governor Board, at a special session, passed a resolution urging twenty American republics to extend all possible assistance, and the State Department was advised that Haitian government has donated $20,000 to its sister republic.

The Red Cross received a telegram from Gov. Roosevelt of Porto Rico stating the storm had cut a thirty-two-mile swath through the Santo Domingo City area. He added one boat load of supplies should have reached Santo Domingo today from San Juan and he planned to send another.

Jury Convicts California Boy

ROBINSON (Ill.) Sept. 6. (AP)—A Circuit Court jury today decided Eugene Firestone, a California youth, was guilty of assault with a deadly weapon. Firestone had been charged with assault with intent to murder after he shot Sheriff C. H. Wallace and State Patrolman Fred Schroeder as they arrested him last June 28 for Los Angeles county authorities on a car-theft charge.

Gary Man Held on Dope Charge

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Ralph B. Bradford, prominent real estate operator and politician of Gary, Ind., surrendered today on a warrant charging him with violation of the Harrison Antinarcotic Act. He appeared before United States Commissioner Dwyer at Hammond, Ind.

The agents declared Bradford had been under surveillance for some time in connection with an asserted New Orleans drug syndicate.

Legion Favors Dry Law Repeal

SARATOGA SPRINGS (N. Y.) Sept. 6. (AP)—The American Legion, Department of New York, concluding its annual convention today, passed a resolution favoring repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

The vote was 370 to 166.

SUPERVISORS SPEND HOURS ON TAX RATE

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Nineteen hours of debate over the tax rate by the Board of Supervisors began early yesterday and ended at 5:05 a.m. today with the result a $4.04 rate was fixed. Last year's rate was $3.94.

CALL ISSUED FOR VETERANS' REUNION

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—A call to 87,000 World War veterans who served in the First Division in France to assemble in Washington for an annual reunion October 23 to 25 was issued today through the War Department. The group was the first combat division to engage the enemy in France, and its claim to 87,000 men lies in the fact its casualties required a replacement of more than three times the division's original strength, when first mobilized.

DEATH ENDS CAREER OF ADMIRAL SIMPSON

BALTIMORE, Sept. 6. (AP)—Rear-Admiral Edward Simpson, 70 years of age, U.S.N., retired, died today at his summer home at Ruxton. His career included commanding a gun turret on Admiral Schley's flagship, the Brooklyn, at the Battle of Santiago in the Spanish-American War.

Hays Group Faces Action for $1,300,000

Independent Producer Seeks Data on Income

Attorney for Distributors Scoffs at Charges

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) A discovery action will be started next week against the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to ascertain the manner of disbursing more than $100,000,000, assertedly the annual income of the organization from its members, it was announced today by Nathan L. Perlman, counsel for Ivan Abramson and the Graphic Film Corporation, plaintiff in a $1,300,000 suit against the Hays organization.

In making the announcement Mr. Perlman said he had just served upon Max D. Steuer, attorney for the Hays organization, a bill of particulars relating to the Abramson suit which was based on charges of violation of the Sherman antitrust law. The bill, which was also filed in the United States District Court, enlarges on the statements contained in the original complaint served upon the defendants, the Hays organization and forty-seven corporations and individuals, on December 30, last.

Mr. Steuer, when asked to comment on the statements made by Mr. Perlman and Mr. Abramson concerning the income of the Hays organization, said he was "not responsible for the extravagant statements of others which sound utterly ridiculous."

He was certain, he said, that the Hays organization "is not going to get frightened about such statements," and he was prepared to meet any charges made in court.

Unemployment Seen Increasing

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—A monthly economic letter issued today by the Labor Bureau, Inc., reported employment further decreasing in the United States.

The bureau said thirty-three wage increases were reported to it during August, compared with forty-four in July, but there were sixty-three reductions, compared with sixty-eight in June.

OLD DOBBIN MAKES ARMY KITCHENS ROLL

LUNEVILLE (France) Sept. 6. (AP) Old Dobbin today won back some of the prestige automobiles had taken from him. Transportation specialists watching the French army maneuvers were forced to find horses to haul the army kitchens along with the troops after the motor trucks had failed. The specialists said it is too early to draw definite conclusions, but admitted the motor service showed great weakness. They said some of the new motor units consumed so much gasoline they were able to carry little besides their own fuel.

First Pictures of Andree Relics Being Dug from Ice

[A. P. Radiophotos]

Where Polar Airmen Met Fate

The photograph above shows Dr. Gunnar Horn's party digging the remains of the Andree expedition out of the ice on White Island. The lower photograph is of the boat used by Andree in reaching White Island. This picture was taken by a member of Dr. Horn's party before the craft was dug from the ice, where it had rested for thirty-three years. These pictures were sent from London to New York by radio, and then rushed to Los Angeles by airplane.

America Deports Villa's Daughter

LAREDO (Tex.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Anita Villa, daughter of the late Pancho Villa, notorious bandit leader of Mexico, was one of fourteen Mexican nationals deported to Mexico through Laredo today.

The woman was arrested by the immigration service in Corpus Christi as an undesirable character and also for illegally entering the country. There were six other women and seven men in the party.

SENATOR WALSH HINTS HE PLANS TO RETIRE

HELENA (Mont.) Sept. 6. (AP)—United States Senator Walsh told the Montana Democratic State convention today he might "claim the privilege of retirement from public life" at the conclusion of a fourth term, the one for which he is now seeking re-election. The Senator did not amplify that statement.

TREASURES OF ANDREE AWAIT SHIP

Relics Suggest Dramatic Picture of Wanderings Made by Balloon Party

TROMSOE (Norway) Sept. 6. (AP) Wrapping up of the relics of Andree expedition, found on White Island, was begun today so the treasures will be ready to carry aboard the Swedish warship Svenskund, when it arrives here.

Some of the relics suggested a dramatic picture of the explorer's wanderings in the deserts of ice. One is a ball of rolled-up thread with fish hooks made from pins attached at intervals. The spring-balance scale carried by the party was almost in good enough condition for use.

In a camera, a roll of film was found. This was removed and packed separately. Packed among the instruments was a dish containing scraps of food. One of the two sledges found, was empty. On the other, which had been drawn up from the shore, was a canvas boat in which most of the objects mentioned in the foregoing were found.

"ADENOIDS" OF GIRL JUST SHOE BUTTON

RED BLUFF, Sept. 6. (AP)—"Adenoids" which had been troubling Carolyn Winter most of the seven years of her life turned out to be a shoe button today. The button, embedded in one of her nostrils, was removed in an operation here.

Glenn Dillard Gunn C. H. De Acres

Gunn School of Music Completely Equipped with STEINWAY PIANOS

The accompanying picture shows Glenn Dillard Gunn, President of the Gunn Music School, Chicago, consummating a contract with C. H. De Acres, Vice President and General Manager of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, which provides that all studios and practice rooms of the Gunn School of Music will be equipped with Steinway pianos.

In expressing his gratification Mr. Gunn says: "The workman must have his tools. The teacher who has the good fortune to be engaged with talents of the first rank must have an artistic piano on which to train them. The STEINWAY is such an instrument and needs no endorsement of mine to add to its prestige. Yet in all the distinguished recognition which the Steinway has earned through the years, it seems to have occurred to no one to say that in the process of making an artist, such an instrument is indispensable. STEINWAY MAKES THE ARTIST!"

There is a Steinway in a model and price to suit every size home and income.

G.O.P. PREDICTS MAINE VICTORY

Democratic Strength to Show National Trend

Republicans Hope to Make Sweep of All Offices

25,000 Majority of 30,000 Being Freely Forecast

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Republicans are looking for sweeping victory in the Maine election Monday. The Democrats, realizing that the Republicans will have to find some straw that shows a weakening of the support traditionally given to the administration party in that State, admit the issues which the Republicans are attacking to the election are defeated by the fact that a number of speakers have been sent into Maine by the Republican National Committee. Senator Simeon D. Fess, Republican, of Ohio, chairman of the committee, has decided to close the campaign with a speech tomorrow night, 'ak

VICTORY PREDICTED

The general expectation is that Governor Wallace White, Republican nominee, will be elected to succeed Senator Arthur R. Gould, Republican who was renominated, that the Republicans will be elected to the House of Representatives in the two congressional districts and that William T. Gardiner, Republican, will be re-elected.

Governor White is opposed by Frank G. Wood, a Portland lawyer. Gov. Gardiner's opponent is Edward C. Reed, Jr., who also was the Democratic nominee two years ago and was defeated at that time by a large majority. Gov. Gardiner has become involved in a controversy over water power. In a referendum the people of Maine opposed exportation of power developed in the State and has been severely criticized by the Democrats. It is charged that the Republican administration has been wasteful and extravagant. Mr. Wood, a young man and a World War veteran, is making an active campaign and even if defeated expects to reduce Gov. Gardiner's 1928 majority.

MAJORITY FORECAST

If the Republicans elect all of their Representatives in Congress they will be well satisfied. The loss of one Representative by the Democrats would be hailed as showing a trend against the administration while election of two Republicans would be regarded as evidence of a sweeping Democratic victory in other States. The Democrats in the off-year election lost two of the four seats they held. In the following November the Democrats gained control of the House.

Governor Brewster carried Maine by a majority of 68,000 over Smith. Governor Hale, Republican, was elected by a margin of 61,000 over Gov. Gardiner by 61,000. While the Republicans are predicting a Republican majority of about 30,000, which will be a record for an off-year, if the Republican majority falls much below that figure the Democrats will claim to find significance in it as to the national administration.

Hoover has not figured to any great extent in the Maine campaign.

HERE'S ILL WIND THAT BLOWS GOOD

Weather Expert Predicts Tropical Hurricane will Put End to Drought

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—Isaac L. Mitchell, weather forecaster, predicted today the remnants of the destructive tropical storm coupled with an atmospheric disturbance developing west of the Rockies, will break the drought which has affected many States.

The meteorologist said the outlook is for a period of general rains in the middle of the week in the North and Middle Atlantic States, frequent showers in the South Atlantic States and a period of general showers beginning about Friday in the Ohio Valley and lower Lakes.

He explained that in the rear of the hurricane remnant now near the coast of Mexico is a mass of cool, warm air, which is coming over the gulf States. The cool disturbance west of the Rockies, he said, will pull the warm air from the southern regions and will combine with it to form general showers throughout drought-stricken areas.

"If the hurricane dwindles to almost nothing, as now seems likely," he said, "it will cause tremendous rain without wind."

MISSOURI PAIR DIE IN AIRPLANE CRASH

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 6. (AP)—A practice flight in an airplane ended tragically here late yesterday for William E. Rothwell, 20 years of age, pilot, and his passenger, Gerald Gittinger, 20, both of Liberty, Mo. The plane exploded and burst into flames as it crashed from a tailspin, killing Gittinger, who was in the forward cockpit. Rothwell died later.

Strange Fluid Charges Batteries Instantly

A simple, harmless fluid which automatically recharges automobile, radio and other wet batteries instantly is being offered on trial to users by Harry Elliott, Suite 185, 4th & Park Sts., Des Moines. This remarkable fluid also prolongs the life of batteries and enables them to hold their charge indefinitely. Dead batteries charge up as if by magic. Old batteries act like new. No trouble—no battery knowledge—can be used instantly by anyone. Mr. Elliott wants you to try it making a free offer. Write him today.—[Advertisement.

TEAMSTERS RIDE DE LUXE TRAIN TO CONVENTION

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Times may be hard in America these days, but today Chicago received proof conclusive that they haven't cramped the style of the Pacific Coast delegation to the convention of the International brotherhood of teamsters, chauffeurs, stablemen and helpers.

Into the Union Station this afternoon rolled a swanky special train of the Milwaukee line carrying the delegates en route to the convention which opens in Cincinnati Monday. It was more than an ordinary all-Pullman train. Five of its cars were exclusively made up of compartments and drawing-rooms; there were a barber shop, an observation car finished in soft green, with deep-cushioned chairs and divans, a club car and parlor car and two dining cars, one finished in green, one in mahogany.

Nobody had furnished the handsome train free or at reduced rates, it was asserted.

The Pacific Coast councils of the brotherhood had contracted for it of their own volition, to see that their delegates lacked none of life's little amenities on their way to Cincinnati and back.

PORT HERE TO GET MORE INSPECTORS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—Forty-five additional assistants and inspectors have been added to the Commerce Department's Steamboat Inspection Service to permit a more thorough examination of vessels. Two of the additional employees have been allotted to Los Angeles.

BINGHAM TO COME HERE

SALEM (Ct.) Sept. 6. (AP)—United States Senator Bingham, chairman of the American Samoan Commission, will leave here tomorrow for Los Angeles, from where the commission will sail on the 11th inst. to make a study of the Islands.

SONS OF ORTIZ RUBIO TO STUDY IN KANSAS

ATCHISON (Kan.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Guillermo and Fernando Rubio, sons of President Ortiz Rubio of Mexico, have enrolled as freshmen at St. Benedict's College here, it was announced today. They are expected to arrive next week.

MEXICANS INCORPORATE

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 6. (AP)—The Association of Protectors of Mexicans, Inc., formed for the purpose of advancing the welfare of Mexican residents of California, filed articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State today. Headquarters are to be in Los Angeles.

COUZENS'S RACE STIRS MICHIGAN

Senator Opposed on Ground of Party Irregularity

DETROIT, Sept. 6. (AP)—Contests for the Republican nominations for ten major offices and for two Democratic Congressional nominations will be decided by the voters of Michigan in the State-wide primary next Thursday. The Republican nomination in each race is regarded as practically equivalent to election.

The campaigns have been devoid of general issues, except in the race for United States Senator where Senator Couzens's opponent, Chase S. Osborn, former Governor, has dwelt upon "party regularity," and in a few Congressional districts where the prohibition question has been raised.

The contest for the Republican nomination for Governor, while a three-cornered one, has been in effect a renewal of the ancient feud between Alx Groesbeck, three times Governor, and the incumbent, Fred W. Green, who beat him four years ago and now is retiring at the end of his second term. Groesbeck is running for the office and Green has given his support to Wilbur M. Brucker, Attorney-General for the State.

Republican incumbents in all thirteen Congressional districts are seeking re-election and seven of them have opposition in the primary.

SENATORIAL WRATH "NYE"

Mrs. McCormick's Detectives May Stir Ire of "Very, Very Sensitive" Senate Members

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick has not strewn any roses along her path to the United States Senate by her admission that she has been and still is "shadowing" Senator Nye of North Dakota, with private detectives.

Senator Nye, pursuant to his duty as chairman of the Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures, has been casting a critical eye over the financial outlay of Mrs. McCormick, who has admitted that she spent from her own handbag more than a quarter of a million dollars in her primary campaign in Illinois, and that altogether approximately $327,000 was expended to get her the Republican nomination.

"I did it," said the daughter of Mark Hanna, when the question was raised as to who had employed private detectives to spy on Senator Nye. "I am still doing it," she added, "and the results have justified my course. What is Senator Nye going to do about it?"

Well, there is one thing Senators can do about it, and that is to deny Mrs. McCormick her seat, if she achieves her ambition of being the first woman ever elected to the United States Senate.

Mrs. McCormick is a very astute politician, but it is suggested here that she may have forgotten momentarily that the Senate is the sole judge of its members, and that the Senate is very, very sensitive about being subjected to espionage, not to mention excessive campaign expenditures. And that the Senate in such matters is prone to stick together, good old "club" that it is.

The "gentlewoman from Illinois," as Speaker Longworth now refers to her in the house (she is a member-at-large from her State) may also have forgotten that the Senate barred Senator-elect Frank L. Smith of her own State, and kicked out William S. Vare of Pennsylvania because it did not like their campaign contributions and expenditures. Also it may have slipped her mind that Truman Newberry of Michigan had to resign to escape being formally ousted after the Senate had declared that the expenditure of a much smaller sum than she admits spending was "too large" and was "contrary to sound public policy, harmful to the honor and dignity of the Senate and dangerous to the perpetuity of free government."

NEW TREATY IN FORCE

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—A treaty of friendship, commerce and consular rights came into force today between the United States and San Salvador.

DRYS INDORSE MRS. O'NEILL

Illinois Anti-Saloon League Pledges Support

Other Leaders Assert Wets Will Name Senator

Lewis and Mrs. McCormick Predict Vote Losses

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill today received the indorsement of the Anti-Saloon League of Illinois in her candidacy for the United States Senate as an independent dry.

Over the protest of several dry leaders, the league executives urged their followers to work for Mrs. O'Neill, saying Ruth Hanna McCormick, the Republican nominee whom they supported in the primary against Senator Deneen, appeared to have betrayed the drys who helped nominate her.

James Hamilton Lewis, Democratic nominee and avowedly wet, said Mrs. O'Neill "nomination by the Republican Prohibition party means a distinct loss of votes to me."

Mrs. McCormick, who has agreed to abide by the decision of the voters in a Prohibition referendum, said Mrs. O'Neill's candidacy is "calculated to split the vote against the Democratic candidate."

Insurance Man Feels Like His Old Self Again

"I wouldn't put my 'OK' on Sargon if it hadn't done me worlds of good and made me well and strong again," recently stated Fred C. Burgderfer, Assistant Sup't. of the

FRED C. BURGDERFER

American National Insurance Co., who lives at 514 East 66th St., Los Angeles.

"I used to have severe pains all through my back and shoulders—something like neuritis or rheumatic pains—and nobody knows how I suffered for five years. My stomach gave me trouble, too, and I couldn't eat a meal without a lot of distress from gas and indigestion. My liver was out of order, I couldn't sleep well and I felt tired all the time. I wasn't myself at all, and my work was a burden.

"So many representative people were praising Sargon I made up my mind to give it a trial; and in just a few weeks time, the pains in my shoulders and back left, and my stomach was in fine condition. Now I eat anything I want, sleep good every night and I'm like my old self again, full of life and energy.

"Sargon Pills are a valuable part of the treatment. They stimulated my liver and regulated me perfectly. The Sargon treatment deserves my recommendation and I'm glad to give it."

Sargon may be obtained at all Owl Drug Stores and Liggett Drug Stores in Los Angeles and other cities.—[Advertisement.

Zinn Hurls Twenty-second Victory of Season

Bay City Team's Ace Given Scare in Ninth Frame

Visitors Take Series' Lead as 7500 Fans Look On

BY BOB RAY

Holding the Angels to six hits and besting the combined efforts of Art Delaney and Lefty Peters in a hurling argument, Jimmy Zinn, bulky right-handed ace of San Francisco's mound staff, chalked up his twenty-second victory of the season last night by pitching the Seals to a 4-to-2 victory over the Angels.

A crowd of 7500 fans saw the Seals' premier pitcher keep the Seraphs in check in all but the fourth and seventh innings despite some faulty support by his mates who were guilty of three errors.

Despite his brilliant mound work Zinn was given a scare in the ninth inning when the only walk he issued was followed by Ray Jacobs's single and Jigger Statz's sacrifice to put the tying runs on second and third with only one away.

ZINN RISES TO OCCASION

The burly right-hander rose to the occasion, however, and retired pinch-hitter Dally Warren on a short fly to Powells and then struck out Truck Hannah to end the game after working the count to three and two.

Zinn's victory gave the Seals a 3 to 2 edge in the series which ends with a double-header this afternoon.

Delaney started on the mound for the Angels and retired the Seals in order during the first four innings only to weaken in the fifth and sixth when the visitors bunched five of their six hits to put over their four runs. Delaney was lifted in the seventh inning and Peters finished, blanking the Seals in the last two rounds.

After three scoreless innings the Angels got a run off Zinn in the fourth without getting a hit. Harper led off with a hot smash to Pinelli which Babe fumbled and then threw wildly to first, Harper reaching second. Haney's sacrifice fly to Coleman moved Harper to third from where he scored after Oana pulled down Schulmerich's long fly.

The Seals came right back with two runs in the fifth to step out in front. With one away Caveney doubled down the left-field line for the first hit off Delaney. Oana followed with another double, his clout going down the right-field line and Caveney romped home. A wild pitch moved Oana to third after which Coleman was purposely walked. Coleman and Oana then pulled off a double steal, the latter scoring without a play being made for him at the plate. Penebsky hit one down to Haney and was safe on the Angel infielder's high throw, but Jacobs retrieved the ball and whipped it to Skiff in time to nip Coleman at the rubber. Zinn popped to Parker for the third out.

Statz reached second on Crosetti's high throw to start the Angel half of the inning and took third on Rawlings's infield out. Jigger died on the far corner, however, when Zinn fanned Skiff and retired Delaney on a fly to Coleman.

Delaney wobbled again in the sixth and the Seals put across two more runs on three hits and an error by Harper. Young Powles began the round with a single over second. Pinelli sacrificed him along. Crosetti singled to left to score Powles and continued on to second when the ball bounced off Harper's hoofs. Baker then punched a single over Parker's head and Crosetti galloped home.

Los Angeles got its second run off Zinn in the seventh, an error by Powles aiding the Angel cause. Ray Jacobs led off with a single to left and continued to second when Powles bobbled the ball. Statz followed with a double down the right-field line to score Jacobs. Zinn then fanned Rawlings, disposed of Hannah, batting for Skiff, on a pop foul to Penebsky, and closed the inning by whiffing Peters, who batted for Delaney.

Peters and Hannah took up the battery duties for the Angels in the eighth and got through the inning without any scoring, although Pinelli was walked and Caveney was hit by a pitched ball to make things slightly embarrassing for the Seraph southpaw.

Tolan Breaks Two Records

ELIZABETH (N. J.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Eddie Tolan, Negro sprinter from the University of Michigan, won the 100 and 220-yard handicap dashes at a track-and-field carnival here today and established new track records in each event. Tolan won the 100 in 9 4-5s. to finish a yard ahead of Sol Mendler, who was given a handicap of five yards. Pete Bowen of Pittsburgh, a scratch man, as was Tolan, finished third. Tolan then won by two feet from Bowen in a brilliant duel in the 220, which the winner covered in 22 3-5s. Fred Sturdy of the Los Angeles A. C. won the pole vault, clearing 13ft.

BABY SAL SCORES QUICK KNOCKOUT

Less than forty-five seconds after the opening round of a scheduled six-round fight, Baby Sal Sorio, Mexican fighter, last night knocked out Johnny White in the feature bout of the weekly card put on by Carlo Curtis at the Main-street Athletic Club. From the start of the mill, it appeared as if White was a little scared to open up, and Sal cornering White delivered a right to the solar plexus that floored White.

Joe Guerrero, reputed lightweight champion of Mexico, won a six-round decision from Johnny Christmas, Negro battler. Leo Domingo and Pastor Calope staged a four-round draw. The fight was replete with action. Jack Slager scored a knockout over Happy Romero in the third round of a proposed four-round go. Al Wilton knocked out Al Peterson in the first round. Wilton's blow apparently went a little below the line, as fans at the ringside yelled foul. The referee awarded the match to Wilton.

FAIR ATTRACTS 284,896 VISITORS

First Week's Attendance Below Last Year

Winners of Jersey Cattle Prizes Announced

California Pioneers to be Governor's Guests

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Attendance for the first seven days of the nine-day California State Fair reached 284,896, Charles W. Paine, secretary-manager, announced today. Although the figure is slightly smaller than the 1929 record-breaking attendance, it is 44,000 more than the total for the first seven days of the 1928 exposition.

Today was dedicated to San Joaquin county, San Francisco, Oakland and Bay counties, Utah, the Sciots' Lodge and Travelers' Protective Association.

The racing program came to a close, with the State fair futurity for 2-year-old pacers one of the feature events.

First honors for Jersey cattle were won by D. Eyman Huff, Orange, a director of the State Agricultural Society. His bull, Maiden Fern's Wexford Noble, was senior champion and grand champion and his Gauntley's Volunteer was junior champion bull. Senior and grand champion Jersey cow was Bull's-eye Oxford Beauty, another Huff animal. Junior champion cow was Willow Meadow Eva's Sultana, shown by Edna L. Knight, Willowz.

Elaborate preparations are being made to honor California pioneers of 1849 and 1850 at the closing day of the fair tomorrow. Thirty-five of the old settlers are to attend a luncheon given in their honor by Gov. Young and directors of the fair and some of them are to participate in the afternoon program.

FLAPPER BANDIT ROBS POLICE CAPTAIN'S HOME

VALLEY STREAM (L. I.) Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—A mysterious flapper burglar, who has jangled the nerves of police, housewives and summer boarders in the Rockaways for weeks with her footings, picked the home of a police captain here to rifle early one morning recently.

Because of the alertness of the wife of Capt. James Wheelwright, whose home she entered, the girl burglar was interrupted but managed to escape. She left behind her the scent of perfume and the imprint of feminine shoes on the lawn outside an open window through which she broke into the house.

About 4 a. m. Mrs. Wheelwright was aroused by noises in the lower rooms of their home. She awakened her sleeping policeman husband and whispered to him that there was a burglar in the house. Capt. Wheelwright told his wife she was just imagining things and went to sleep again. Mrs. Wheelwright, still suspicious, went to the head of the stairs and peered into the lower rooms.

She saw a dark, skirt-clad figure moving quietly about the living rooms using a flashlight. She screamed and the captain dashed downstairs in time to see the flapper burglar vaulting out of a window.

COLOMBIA PRESIDENT WILL SIGN LOAN BILL

BOGOTA (Colombia) Sept. 6. (AP) President Enrique Olaya Herrera either today or tomorrow will sign the administration bill permitting the government to borrow $30,000,000 and lend it to Colombian banks. Congress passed the measure last night. Representative Aquilino Villegas, the lone opposition to the administration project, was saved from an angry mob by armed police. The mob leaders shouted they were going to duck him in the Plaza Bolivar fountain.

BRITISH TROOPS FIGHT AFGHANS

Seven Natives and Three Militiamen Killed

Attacking Tribesmen Beaten Off with Shrapnel

Further Trouble Expected in Peiwar District

SIMLA (India) Sept. 6. (AP)—Severe fighting between British troops and raiding Afghan tribesmen on the northwest frontier broke out Thursday night and continued Friday morning. An official announcement today said seven native Indian recruits and three militiamen had been killed at Kharlechi post.

Hostile tribesmen from Kurram attacked the post, which is ten miles southwest of Parachinar. They also skirmished with picket posts held by "Chighas" (friendly armed villagers) along the Kurram River.

The defenders beat off the attacks with shrapnel and rifle fire.

Enemy casualties are believed to be considerable but could not be ascertained.

The tribesmen were driven back across the border but yesterday afternoon reoccupied their former threatening position.

Other tribesmen are reported to be gathering in the Peiwar area with hostile intentions.

Child Draws Fire from National Assembly

PANAMA CITY, Sept. 6. (AP)—The political unrest which has swept Latin America this year, spread today to the republic of Panama with [illegible] reports asserting the Cabinet had resigned. President Arosemena denied this evening, however, that he has received no resignation.

It is understood to center about Agustin B. Duncan, Secretary of Public Instruction. The National Assembly at the beginning of the present session requested President Arosemena to prevent Duncan from presenting his biennial report before the chamber, urging the executive to convey the report otherwise.

It is understood that Duncan will not resign because he enjoys the President's confidence, the lack of which would be the only motive for his quitting.

MASONIC LODGE IN HOLY LAND HAS MIXED RITES

LONDON, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) "An interesting account is to hand of the progress of Freemasonry in the Holy Land where there are lodges under the English, Scottish and Egyptian constitutions," writes Dudley Wright, English Masonic historian.

"The correspondent who forwards the account described a visit to the Lodge of Mount Zion under the Egyptian Constitution. The lodge is a Hebrew lodge and the working was in that language, but, on this occasion, the Master, after he had opened the lodge in Hebrew, handed his gavel to an Arab Christian, who worked the degree in Greek, as the candidate was a Greek priest. Then the lodge passed to other degrees in French and Hebrew and a speech was delivered in Irish by a visitor. As the candidate was a priest he was permitted to retain his cassock through the ceremony.

"In the lodge working under the Scottish Constitution the membership consists of Jews, Copts, Maromites, Moslems and Christians. The Bible and the Koran were both on the pedestal, to be used by the candidates as they thought fit."

another house. Half a mile from his home he was picked up by a fast automobile and rushed to the camp where he proclaimed the revolution to his expectant troops.

As the moon rose tonight over the rose-colored Government House on the Plaza de Mayo armored cars and soldiers drove up to reinforce the revolutionary troops. They set up field kitchens in the plaza and fraternised with the crowds.

Gen. Uriburu appeared on the balcony of the Government House and addressed the crowds. He pointed out that now that the dictators had been completely removed from the army it was up to the people by means of the ballot to determine their own destiny and appoint their chosen representatives.

The change of the fortune of the republic first began to manifest itself at 9 this morning when military planes flying in close fighting formation swooped over the city, dropping leaflets urging the people to revolt. The pamphlets electrified the city, already at a high tension since the night before when Irigoyen had temporarily handed over the reins of power. It was felt, however, that Dr. Martines was only his shadow and that he would resume office as soon as it seemed safe.

The ultimatum which Gen. Uriburu sent to the government asked for its resignation by 4 p.m. on pain of bombardment of the palace if refused. Admiral Storni, in command of thirteen war vessels in the harbor, notified the government that he would refuse to fire on the army if ordered to do so.

Students from the St. Martin Military Academy began pouring into the city and revolutionary fervor spread until it was clear that the government was doomed. Dr. Martines and the Cabinet were in conference all day long, but when troops began pouring into the city a white flag fluttered up over the Government House in token of surrender.

This revolution, the first in Argentina since 1890, is interpreted by observers to be due partly to economic and partly to political causes. The financial policy of the government is said to have brought about the fall of the peso from 42 cents to 14 cents, the refusal of Yrigoyen to appoint envoys in many important foreign countries, including the United States, is said to have affected Argentine trade, and finally the world-wide economic slump caused a fall in the price of wheat and cattle, important Argentine products.

GEN. URIBURU PUTS NATION UNDER ARMED RULE

(Copyright 1930, and all rights reserved by the Associated Press.)

BUENOS AIRES, Sept. 6. (AP)—The leader of the Argentina revolt, Gen. Jose Evaristo Uriburu, has taken charge of the government, named a civilian Cabinet and issued a proclamation saying the country is under strict military law.

Vice-President Enrique V. Martinez, who had taken over the government yesterday under constitutional provisions with the retirement of President Yrigoyen, then resigned and told the commander of the loyal forces, Gen. Toranzo, to lay down his arms.

Gen. Uriburu officially announced he will head the new provisional government, with Lieut.-Col. Emilio Kinkelin as Secretary and the following civilian Cabinet:

Vice-President, Enrique Santa Marina; Minister of Finance, Enrique Perez; Minister of the Interior, Marias Sanches Sorondo; Minister of Public Instruction, Ernesto Padilla; Minister of Foreign Relations, Ernesto Bosch; Minister of Agriculture, Horacio Becca Varela, and Minister of Public Works, Octavio S. Pico.

Then he announced the freedom of the press will be re-established.

A proclamation, issued by Gen. Uriburu at the same time he announced the Cabinet personnel, decrees execution before a firing squad for those who violate the new regime of military law. It follows:

"The military power which has been constituted as the provisional government of this nation has before it the primary mission of maintaining order and protecting life and property. It, therefore, warns the public as follows:

"First, any individual who may be caught trespassing on the property of any inhabitant of the nation or plotting against the military forces and the security of the nation shall be placed before a firing squad without the formality of a trial.

"Second, those who issue this proclamation can make it effective only under the sole authority and responsibility of an officer of the army or navy. Lower ranking officers who catch any individual committing any offense forbidden by the first part of this proclamation shall immediately turn him over to the highest officer of the junta for immediate execution."

NOTICIAS MUNDIALES DE ULTIMA HORA

NOTAS TELEGRAFICAS

Quedan los Muertos en la Región Desolada por el Huracán

SANTO DOMINGO, Septiembre 6.—Las cuadrillas de auxilio se han dedicado hoy a la triste tarea de quemar los muertos hechos por el huracán, que, según últimos datos, ascienden a unos dos mil.

Se encendieron piras funerarias, única manera posible de hacer frente a la situación, y se amontonaron sobre ellas los cuerpos de las víctimas para su incine ración.

El inventario de la catástrofe revela que el terrible vendaval destruyó, parcial o totalmente, unas dies mil casas. Según informes oficiales, ya se han recobrado más de mil cadáveres.

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Septiembre 6.—"Queda usted multado en 40,000,000 de pesos", anunció el primer juez de distrito de la ciudad de Guadalajara al general S. Santos, según rezan despachos recibidos de la capital de Jalisco.

La acusación que pesaba sobre el reo era la de haber secundado la revolución de la Huerta, hace varios años, y en la multa referida están comprendidos los daños sufridos por el gobierno de resultas de esa revolución. El general Santos es en la actualidad un jefe del ejército mejicano. Cuarenta millones de pesos equivalen, más o menos, a veinte millones de dólares.

El Leviathan Hace Calaveradas

NUEVA YORK, Septiembre 6.—Habiendo perdido el gobierno hoy en una rápida corriente, el gigantesco vapor de líneas "Leviathan" dio contra un alijador de grúa, y lo echo a pique. Arremetió después contra tres muelles del Río Hudson, y los demolió. El Leviathan, con 538 pasajeros a bordo, había zarpado del Muelle 86 para Cherburgo y Southampton, y momentos después perdía el gobierno. Ocho remolcadores acudieron en auxi'io del enorme paquebote, y pudo éste continuar luego sucamino.

Los Maestros del Estado le Sacan la Vuelta a Cupido

SACRAMENTO, Septiembre 6.—Vierling Kersey, superintendente del Estado, declarra que el matrimonio no mermó este año tanto como el pasado las filas de los maestros de escuela de California. Esta circunstancia, junto con la de mayor seguridad de sus puestos, debida a la ley de tenencia, redujo a 2808 el número de nuevos maestros destinados a las escuelas para el período de otoño. En 1929 hubo 3935 nuevos nombramientos.

NOTAS LOCALES

Se Desiste una Actriz de un Acción contra Costello

El juicio contra el actor de cine Maurice Costello, por falta de cumplimiento de promesa, instituido por la actriz Vivienne Sengler, quien exigia al primero $100.000 de indemnización, ha concluido ayer repentinamente, pues la joven se presentó en el juzgado y se desistió de su acción sin renunciar a sus derechos. Lo que significa que la señorita Sengler puede promover otro juicio en cualquier momento. La querellante no quiso comentar su acto, y dijo sólo lo siguiente:

"No quiero decir más sino que salgo para Nueva York a principios de la entrante semana."

En su demanda contra Costello, ídolo que fue de matinée, y padre de la señora John Barrymore y de Helene Costello, peliculeras, declaró la señorita Sengler que Costello le propuso casarse con ella el 10 de Septiembre de 1928 en Stockton, que, de común acuerdo, fijaron el día de la boda para el 22 de Abril de 1929. La acción judicial de que se trata fue promovida en Diciembre próximo pasado.

Cuando fue demandado, Costelle dismintió que hubiera propuestr matrimonio a la señorita Sengler. Dijo haberla conocido en San Francisco, cuando él trabajaba allí en vodevil, y haberla invitado a comer varias veces; pero nunca la solicitó para esposa.

Todavía Está Deliberando el Jurado de Reyna

Desde el viernes empezó a deliberar el jurado que conoció de la causa de Juan Reyna, matador del guardia de Los Angeles Verne Brindley, y todavía ayer no pronunciaba veredicto. Quedará encerrado el domingo, y continuará deliberando el lunes. El juez McComb dijo que no disolvería el jurado sino hasta haber abandonado toda esperanza de que se ponga de acuerdo en el voto.

A Reyna, como se recuerda, se le acusa de haberse apoderado del revólver del guardia municipal, y matado a este de un balazo poco despues de haber sido arrestado por violación de ordenanzas de tráfico, y cuando iba siendo conducio a la comisaría central.

BOND TRADING PACE QUICKENS

Los Angeles Exchange Survey Shows Investing Trend

Demand in Senior Securities Sharply Stimulated

Wide Price Advance Made by Leading Issues

Evidence pointing to the increasing demand for bonds as a medium for the employment of investment funds is sharply indicated by a review of trading in the senior securities on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange over recent months.

The stimulus imparted to dealings in the fixed income class of investment is reflected in statistics issued yesterday by F. E. Sanford, secretary and manager of the exchange. The survey shows a jump in bond transactions during the eight months this year of 260 per cent over the 1929 activity. August trading was nearly eight times that of August, 1929.

Par value of bonds traded in for 1930, through August, totaled $2,507,500, as compared to $696,000 for eight months in 1929 and $779,500 for the entire year. March, 1930, with bond sales totaling $638,500, was the most active bond period of the current year to date and showed an increase of 124 per cent over the $280,500 bonds traded in during January, 1929, the high month of the previous year.

The average price of the fifty-six listed bonds showed an increase of $5.75 over the fifty-six bonds in August of 1929. Total market value of bonds at the close of thep eriod just passed amounted to $1,087,494,363, with an average price of $100.50, as compared to an equal number of bonds with a market value of $1,031,-286,573 and an average price of $94.75 for the same period of the previous year.

"In comparing the closing bond quotations for the month of August for this year and last year we find that all bonds, with the exception of one, has shown a gain over the previous year's price," Mr. Sanford stated. The most sensational price increase of the entire list was registered by Los Angeles Railway, 4's of 1940, with a jump of 16 5-8 points. Southern Pacific Railway 4's of 1955 gained 9 1-2 points, Southern Counties Gas 4 1-2's of 1952, 8 1-2 points and Pacific Gas and Electric B 6's of 1941 5 3-4 points.

The following tabulation shows the range and volume of the leading bond issues for the first eight months of 1930:

Bond—	Sales.	High.	Low.	Last.
Mansfield Oil 6s, 1937	$638,000	89¼	83¼	86¼

Operating Pace at Steel Plants for Week Given

YOUNGSTOWN, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company's operations will continue unchanged next week at 55 per cent capacity as will the Carnegie Steel Company's plants in the Youngstown district.

Empire Steel Corporation reports unchanged schedules with only the Mansfield and Falcon plants operating of the corporation's six properties. Most of Empire's sheet orders are being filled at Mansfield, where the sheet department is at capacity.

Sharon Steel Hoop Company's operations will continue unchanged at 65 per cent of capacity. Newton Steel Company will maintain its advance to 80 per cent of capacity in operation of the Newton Falls plant and Mahoning Valley Steel Company's sheet works will be under power after one week's idleness. This company will have five sheet units operating.

RAILS PLAN FOR UPTURN IN TRAFFIC

Pennsylvania Official Says Huge Program of Building Under Way

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) A $1,000,000,000 construction program is being carried out by the railroads of the country so that they will be in better condition than ever before to serve the needs of a prosperous country when business resumes normal progress, according to Elisha Lee, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

"The railroads are determined to be in that position when the tide turns and business resumes its normal progress," Mr. Lee said. "They are attesting their faith in the country. The United States has gone through many slack periods of business and we have always come out better than before. We shall do so again this time.

"The great businesses and the great fortunes of this country have been built up by men who were intelligent optimists on America. Such men are shaping our railroad policies today. They are shaping them for a future greater than anything in our past.

"We are steadily pushing forward the largest program of improvements we have ever undertaken, including electrification, both passenger and freight, of the main lines linking our seaboard terminals in the dense eastern territory. Completion of this work will speed up train movements from Tidewater to the Mississippi and benefit every industry and community we serve.

"The latest reports of new work thus far done show large advances over last year. Current maintenance is thorough, though naturally for the time being the lighter traffic results in less wear and tear to be made good."

BANK ACTIVITY MAY REVIVE

Transamerica Project Should Induce Other Holding Companies to Change Chains into Branches

BY EARLE E. CROWE

Transamerica's proposal to consolidate its two large branch-bank systems in California into a single organization may influence a realignment of the banking situation in other parts of the country. And incidentally, the whole program may within the next few months assist in lifting bank stocks from the rut of inactivity.

In the Northwest, the Central and Atlantic States are several bank-holding companies operating chains of banks and also branch systems. These organizations, as has the Transamerica Corporation, have been waiting favorable legislation for nation-wide branch banking, but the proposed Transamerica step may induce these holding companies to follow suit.

WILL SET PRECEDENT

If the Comptroller of Currency grants permission to Transamerica to shift the head offices of its branch banks to one city in order to conform with the bank consolidation law, then the precedent will be established for other holding companies.

The incentive of major operating economies should influence the holding companies to follow suit, since this is a time in which banks are not contributing substantially to the treasury of the controlling organizations. Any constructive measure that promises improvement in profits will probably strike a responsive chord.

National bank authorities, moreover, are undoubtedly interested in developments that will bring more resources into the national and Federal Reserve systems. In these holding companies are many State banks outside the Federal Reserve.

Sympathetically, a large-scale program of this nature may have an effect on bank stocks. There is also the possibility that Transamerica, as the leading exponent of nation-wide branch banking, may follow its California consolidation by the accumulation of other bank shares to lay the intermediate foundation for a coast-to-coast branch system. Once started, other groups would certainly enter the competition.

OTHER BANKS REQUIRED

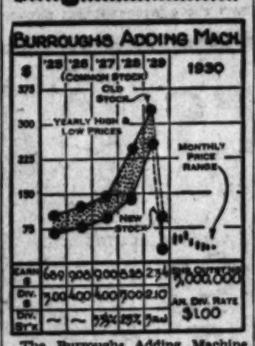
Outside of California, Transamerica owns outright the First National Bank of Portland and the Bank of America, N. A., of New York City. To establish a nation-wide system the purchase of banks in such cities as Denver, Salt Lake, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, Detroit, Philadelphia, etc., would be necessary.

At one time Transamerica owned stocks in the banks of the leading cities, but from the last statement of condition it appears the most of these outside bank stocks have been sold. Aside from holdings in a half dozen California banks, Transamerica's only bank investment is in the First National of New York.

OIL EARNINGS OFF

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Producers and Refiners' Corporation for the six months ended June 30, last, showed a net loss of $820,511, after all charges against a net loss of $483,720 in the first half of 1929.

WHAT'S BEHIND YOUR STOCK



The Burroughs Adding Machine Company is one of the leading manufacturers of the world in the field of adding, calculating, booking and billing machines and accessories. This company, which started in business forty-four years ago, has about 450 United States and foreign patents in force, which some were obtained by acquisition or owned originally. A string of wholly owned subsidiaries throughout this and foreign countries, takes care of the sales end of the business. In addition to its other activities a large printing establishment is maintained at Detroit, Mich., at which place a business magazine with a large circulation is published.

The cash position of Burroughs has been consistently strong. The present time is no exception as shown by the latest balance sheet which indicates current assets of $32,809,400, including $16,830,600 in cash and government securities. This figure compares with current liabilities of only $5,124,900, leaving a net working capital of $29,685,500.

Although interim statements are not available, the company's business throughout the United States for the first half of 1930 was reported as about 10 per cent under the volume for the same period of 1929.

CAPITALIZATION

Funded debt, none. Capital stock (no par,) 3,000,000 shares.

Current Data: It is considered that Burroughs, because of the dominant position which it occupies in its field, will immediately react to any general improvement in business conditions.

Plans for New Diamond Match Set-up on Way

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. — Under the plan and agreement of reincorporation and recapitalization dated the 6th inst., stockholders of Diamond Match Company are being asked to deposit their stock with Bank of America, N. A., or Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Company on or before October 15, next. Certificates of deposit for 170,000 shares of common stock have been listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange

The plan provides for reincorporation under the laws of Delaware or such other States as may be determined by the stockholders' committee composed of E. M. Stevens, R. P. Grant and W. R. Begg. It also provides for the transfer of assets of the present Illinois corporation to the new company or in lieu thereof, to transfer substantially all of the capital stock of the present company.

For each share of present capital stock there will be issued five shares of 6 per cent cumulative participating preferred stock and four shares of no-par value common stock of the new corporation. The preferred stock will have a par value of $25 a share and be entitled to cumulative dividends at the rate of 6 per cent annually and will share with the common stock in further dividends, after common stock has received $1.50 a share in any year, to the extent of an additional 2 per cent.

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. — The Chicago Curb has admitted to trading on a when-issued basis the new common and preferred stock of Diamond Match Company.

Net of United Power Higher

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—United Light and Power Company and subsidiaries for the twelve months ended July 31, last, today reported consolidated net income of $11,309,359 after all charges, including depreciation, interest, amortization, taxes and subsidiary preferred dividends, equal after preferred dividends to $2.37 a share on 3,328,209 average number of combined Class A and B common shares outstanding during the period.

This compares with $7,426,331, or $1.80 a share on 3,185,971 average number combined common shares in the preceding period. Gross income for the twelve months was $96,260,065, as against $92,400,423 in the previous year.

BROKERS SIGHT UPTURN

Los Angeles Dealers See Market Action Anticipating Improvement in Business

What Spring-street brokers think of the current position of the stock market and the probable future trend of prices is summarized in the following representative opinions:

That well-informed interests are looking for improvement in business conditions in the near future is becoming more and more evident as many statistically sound issues are pushing into new high ground for the recovery. The public, however, continues to maintain its laissez-faire attitude and is more concerned with current unsatisfactory business news than with probable favorable developments in the days to come. It wants to be shown before it acts. Under such conditions periodic reactions, offering favorable trading opportunities, are to be expected. While we wish to caution against buying securities on waves of sudden enthusiasm, we continue to feel that leading securities should be purchased during reactionary periods. The constructive forces have statistical and technical factors allied on their side while the bearish interests, faced with the probabilities of an improved outlook, cannot risk putting out major lines until they get concrete evidence that the expected improvement is not going to materialize.—F. F. Hargesr, Sutro & Co.

Last week's market action was similar to the previous week; the first half-steady, then in two sessions sold down 2 points, coming back strong on Friday and Saturday, recovering not only the loss but breaking through a resistance point on the top side which has held since June. The volume of trading is still small, but it indicates that the definite turning point has been reached and that the general action will be upward from this time. The market has begun its anticipation of an improvement in business conditions and will continue to record this unless some bad news or poor business reports follow again next quarter. Saturday's reported revolt in Buenos Aires with their cessation in the trading grain futures has given added stimulus to our commodity market and will be of material benefit. — Fred P. Schrader, Dean Witter & Co.

Activity broadened with the advancing market at the close of last week. The larger volume of trading and slight increase in brokers' loans bear evidence of increasing public participation. From a technical standpoint the market has conducted itself admirably and, aside from occasional minor setbacks in special issues, appears headed considerably higher for the next week or so. Groups which appear particularly favored include the utilities, steels, chemicals and sulphur stocks, foods, tobaccos, motion-picture and mail-order stocks and certain specialty issues. A few of the rails, motors and some chain-store issues show up well, but for the most part these groups have not realized sufficient business improvement to warrant general participation in the advance as yet. The oils and coppers have shown quiet accumulation in anticipation of better reports before the end of the year.—Wilcox Drake, Wilcox Drake & Co.

The market during the closing sessions of the week just passed staged an impressive rally. The move as yet is almost wholly professional in character and is based on the expectation of an early improvement in industrial operations. Unless such improvement materialises soon, present average levels are not justified and are not likely to be maintained. An increasing number of stocks are, however, pretty thoroughly deflated and might safely be accumulated for the long pull irrespective of intermediate swings in the market.—Walter V. Dobbs, Banks, Huntley & Co.

While recently there was some disappointing news in the way of dividend reductions, constructive news more than offset this and at the end of the week, the market showed splendid gains throughout the list. There was a slight improvement in unemployment, a 4 per cent gain in building construction, car loading showed a gain of 18,866 over the preceding week, a $225,000,000 increase in savings bank deposits in the first half of the year, dividend disbursements in July were $35,000,000 greater than in the same month last year, there were small gains in retail sales in the leading department stores and there was an advance in Chicago of ½ cent per gallon in gasoline. Too many people are influenced by "chart" systems and not paying enough attention to fundamental conditions. It is the optimist and far-sighted investor who, taking advantage of all reactions in the market for purchase, will be the money maker in the long run. Standard stocks and those that show evidence of increased earnings should be selected for purchase on all reactions.—J. D. Kennedy, H. J. Barnesen & Co.

Market this week has shown with some conclusiveness that present level is technically sound. Would look for continuation of upward trend over at least the next week, although from time to time setbacks should be a possibility, particularly

CROPS OUTPUT DATA FORECAST

Wheat Production Estimated 3 Per Cent Higher

Europe Feed Grains to Show Sharp Decrease

Decline Reported in Cotton Consumed to Date

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6. (AP)—A world wheat crop of 2,337,139,000 bushels, an increase of almost 3 per cent over last year, was forecast today by the Department of Agriculture on the basis of reports from twenty-six countries.

Reports from nineteen counties indicated a world rye crop of 41,-436,000 bushels, or about 2 per cent less than last year's production.

FOREIGN CROPS LESS

European production of feed grains—corn, barley and oats—was reported to total 29,788,000 short tons, compared with 35,572,000 short tons last year, or a decrease of over 16 per cent.

The feed grain survey did not include specific figures on the Russian crop, which are not available. The latter is estimated at about two-thirds of its total for last year, which would mean a decrease in European production of more than 18 per cent.

COTTON MILLS QUIETER

World mill consumption of cotton of all growths was set at 25,-209,000 running bales for the year ended July 31, last, as compared with 25,882,000 bales for the previous corresponding year, a decrease of 2.6 per cent.

Total mill consumption of American cotton for the season 1929-1930 was given as 13,023,000 running bales, against 15,076,000 bales the previous season, a decrease of 13.6 per cent. Consumption of American cotton in the United States during the 1929-1930 season was reported as 14.3 per cent below the previous season.

Stocks of American cotton in United States mills on July 31, this year, were set at 1,048,000 running bales, as compared with 932,000 bales last year.

A preliminary estimate of wool shorn in the United States this year placed the total at 328,000,000 pounds, or 5 per cent more than 1929. Present indications were said to point to a world wool clip, exclusive of Russia and China, not greatly different from that of last year, although a small reduction is expected in the Australian clip.

New Investment Trust Offering Scheduled Soon

All-American Investors' Corporation, a new fixed investment trust based upon shares of forty leading railroads, utility and industrial corporations, will shortly make an initial offering of its trust shares, cumulative Series A, at the market, now about 12 1-8, according to an announcement yesterday by Ross, Pratt & Batty, Inc., who will act as general distributors.

This offering will be followed by the issuance of a distributive series, based on the same portfolio but returning to shareholders in addition to all regular and extra cash and regular stock dividends and rights, proceeds from the sale of extra stock dividends and split-ups which are retained in the cumulative series.

In event that the earnings of any company whose stock is held by the trust in any fiscal year fail to equal its average five-year earnings or a company fails to pay a dividend in any fiscal year at least equal to the average five-year dividend rate, the depositor is permitted to sell such shares and to return the cash proceeds to the shareholders.

MEETING CALLED

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Independent Oil and Gas Company has called a special meeting of stockholders for the 30th inst. to vote on the proposal to sell the assets of the company to Phillips Petroleum Company on the basis of 7.6 shares of Phillips for every ten shares of Independent Oil.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Trading in cotton was unusually quiet here today and prices seemed sensitive to small orders either way. An opening advance on relatively steady cables was followed by declines under week-end realizing and some southern selling prompted by a favorable view of the weather situation, rather large private crop figures, and a feeling that recent covering had eased the technical position. After selling up to 11.50 at the opening, the new December eased off to 11.42 or 14 points net per easel off to 11.42 or 14 points net per easel, and closed at 11.47. The general market closed barely steady at net declines of 9 to 11 points.

COTTONSEED OIL

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—The cottonseed oil market was quiet today with trading confined almost wholly to locals. The tone improved during the session and the close was firm. This was largely a reflection of strength in grains and lard. Old contracts closed 5 to 10 points higher. Total sales were 600 barrels in old and 1900 in new. The average of estimates of the cotton crop made by thirty-nine members of the cottonseed oil trade on the New York Produce Exchange is 14,221,000 bales. EXPORT ITEM SHOWS GAIN

American Industrial Machinery Shipments for First Seven Months of 1930 Up to Record High

BY JOHN F. SINCLAIR

[Copyright, 1930, by the North American Newspaper Alliance]

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Not all American foreign trade has dropped off this year. American exports of industrial machinery show a gain over last year and the largest total of any first seventh-month period in nine years, according to the Department of Commerce.

Up to August 1 the United States sent industrial machinery valued at $149,483,813—$1,150,000 more than for the same period of last year. So a new record peak has been made in this field.

Particularly significant is the activity in the oil well and refining machinery field, which shows a 15 per cent increase over 1929.

Shipments in oil and refining machinery for the seven months' period were above $18,000,000.

In the textile field the activity shows a real drop. United States textile exports dropped more than 46 per cent for the month of July and nearly 34 per cent for the seven-month period.

But, even then, the record is not as low as it is in Great Britain, the real home of world textile export.

Cheap credit cuts down banking revenue. But it is doing something else—more important. It is "one of the forces making for business recovery."

"As one well-known financial writer has recently pointed out, when caution was necessary optimism was rampant; now, when courage is necessary, pessimism prevails. Until this has been dispelled a substantial upturn in business cannot occur," says George P. Rand, president of the Marine Trust Company of Buffalo.

Speaking of the immediate business future, this Buffalo banker continues:

"Although there may be further recessions, the risk in making commitments now in goods or commodities is materially less than it was a year ago. For more than a year restricted production has done much to relieve whatever surplus of goods existed and replacement demand is now appearing. Producers and distributors, aided by ample credit, low prices and the aggressive spirit, typical of American industry, are now establishing the basis for a sustained recovery."

Mr. Rand, who heads the largest group-banking organization in the United States, centering about the Marine Trust Company of Buffalo, was born in New York State thirty-eight years ago and is a graduate in economics of the University of Pennsylvania.

Most of the banks associated with the Marine-Midland group, with assets exceeding $600,000,000, are located in Northern New York State.

COTTON OFF IN QUALITY AT MEMPHIS

Staple of Central Belt Shorter in Length and Drought Damaged

MEMPHIS, Sept. 6.—First movement of the cotton crop through the northern part of the Delta the past week has brought to light considerable damage to the staple from the drought, aside from the leafy bales coming in from worm-infested areas. Local dealers handling North Mississippi cotton report the staple shortened at least one length in the bolls now opening and presumably in those ready to open, but the grade continues very white and running middling and far better in most instances.

In the hill sections of Northeast Mississippi and in Northern Arkansas the quality of the cotton and the seed also is running poorer than for several years. Especially in Northern Arkansas conditions are serious with the yield out 50 to 75 per cent all through the northern half, except in a small area in the extreme northeastern part around Blytheville. The affected area of Arkansas is probably the worst part of the cotton belt at present.

On a trip of 225 miles through West Tennessee, while suffering respondent found conditions greatly in contrast to those in Arkansas. West Tennessee, which suffering somewhat from the drought, has escaped terrific damage suffered by adjoining sections and has a good chance to produce 400,000 to 450,000 bales. The West Tennessee feed crops are also in fair shape.

The movement in the immediate Memphis territory will not begin for another ten days or two weeks, but scattered bales indicate never damage. It is believed to be very heavy in the uplands. While yet too early to determine the extent of the damage, it is believed to b very havy, but possible of redemption to some extent if rain comes within the next two weeks.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

Transamerica Continues Advance on Rapid Trading; Claude Neon and Edison Strengthen

Transamerica Corporation, believed the subject of aggressive pool operations, continued to hold the spotlight on yesterday's brief session of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange. From the opening shares of the issue crossed the board with a rapidity that has not been witnessed on the local market for some time and from the initial sale at 24½ the stock steadily gained momentum to close with a rush to a new current high at 25½, up ¾ for the day and more than two points since the move was initiated Friday.

Brokerage circles are of the opinion that the group operating in the stock are capitalizing developments within the company such as the proposed merger of the Bank of Italy and Bank of America of California with its resultant economies, and extensions in banking fields of other States and countries. In the three and one-half hours, 7600 shares were traded, in addition to 30,800 in San Francisco and 30,600 on the New York Stock Exchange, which at $25 a share represents a value of $1,223,000.

Claude Neon proved a surprise of the session with a revival of activity that accounted for 1300 shares for the half-day period. The issue spurted nearly 3 points to 35 3-4 and closed at 35½. The stock had not been traded since last Wednesday.

Richfield continued to attract considerable attention in view of an expected announcement of financing and explanation of the proposed change in par value from $25 to no-par. The stock was run up an additional 3-4 to 16 3-4 on a turnover of 700 shares. The balance of the oil list either held firm or showed a small fractional improvement.

Each of the Southern California Edison preferred stocks continued in demand and scored a fractional gain with two of the stocks marking a new peak for the year. The common stock advanced 1 3-8 to 58 1-8.

Western Air Express sold at 36 1-4, down 3-4.

Sales totaled 13,347 shares valued at $461,523; previous day, 21,302 shares valued at $588,724.

Complete New York Stock Exchange Report

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Following is the complete closing list of today's transactions on the New York Stock Exchange:

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—The bond market was dull, but firm today. Changes in quotations almost were nonexistent. Only a few of the rails added small fractions to the week's gains.

Reflexes of Argentine ructions in sympathy with the political unsettlement spread to 5 first other Latin Americans. Issues among the Argentine 6s, 7s and 8s of 1st and all but three of the active industrials declined small fractions. Public Ut. lost nearly 2 points and Cities Service Pf. Argentine 7s eased more than a point, but the Buenos Aires Provincials were firm. Sao Paulo issues also were firm.

Convertible and stock warrant bonds improved slightly, but the gains were confined to fractions. Paramount Transportation 6s broke 6½ points. Loew's 6s with warrants were up 2.

The Army fall instigated Burlington 4½s and Alaskas 6s (Rocky Mountain division).

Utilities very quiet. American Telephone issued. Industrials irregular. Steels featured by a 2-point rise in Pitt. Steel Pf. Motors, rubbers and oils were strong.

Trading in the United States Government was almost at a standstill. Prices were firm.

The quotations represent sales or bids (in thousands of dollars) and the yield (to maturity) or price to which given, for regular transactions in the issues dealt in during the day (in cases in the red), and both bid and offer when same is bid.

Wheat Futures Close Higher on Nervous Mart

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Disturbing news from Argentina, together with reports that trouble was spreading to Brazil, where crops were reported badly damaged, sent wheat prices soaring today. Buying by the Chicago bull leader, Bernard Baruch, and other prominent bull operators in the market gave additional impetus to the rally. News of widespread drouth damage to the Canadian spring wheat crop, which has been confirmed by private reports, also was a bullish factor. Cash houses bought freely, and final prices were at the top of the day's extreme advance. Wheat closed firm, 2¢ to 3¢ net higher, with December $1.07½ to $1.07¾ and May $1.12¾ to $1.13. Corn finished ¾¢ to 1¼¢ up, oats ¼¢ to ½¢ advanced and provisions ranged from 10¢ lower to 2¢ higher.

Wheat prices were extremely nervous and unsettled at times during the session. Fluctuations were the widest in many months. Bullish factors included the unfavorable crop reports, the continued export business, and the fact that the market had been oversold on the recent break. Bearish influences were the enormous world's supply, the huge Canadian crop, and the fact that the Argentine crop was not damaged as much as had been feared. Liquidation was on a large scale during the early part of the session, but part of the loss was recovered on the rally, and final prices were higher.

Cash houses were the principal buyers. Shorts were alarmed at the Argentine news and covered freely. Commission houses were also buyers. Export business was reported fairly good. Receipts were 1,000,000 bushels.

Corn followed wheat and closed firm. Cash demand was good. Prices were quieter and held around

NEW PURCHASE OF GRAPES DUE

Control Board Sends Word of Latest Program

Buying of 57,000 Tons to be Procedure This Time

All Will be Employed in Making By-products

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Circulars placed in the mail tonight by the California Grape Control Board announce to growers of juice and table varieties the details of the board's second stabilization purchasing program of 57,000 tons, both white and black, the entire purchase to be devoted exclusively to by-products.

The board will pay $17.50 per ton, including the $1.50 stabilization fee, for black varieties delivered at district plants of Fruit Industries, Inc., component part of the control board. White grapes will bring $15 per ton on the same basis.

DETAILS LISTED

Delivery for Southern California producers must be at the Cucamonga or Guasti plants, in the San Joaquin Valley at Delano, and in Northern California at Napa or Ukiah.

The board will pay $11.50 per ton for Tokay, Malaga and Empress varieties, most of which are centered in the San Joaquin Valley.

In all instances, the fruit must be ripe, sound, free from mildew or mold, rot or other commercial defect, free from contact with iron and contain a sugar content of not less than 22 per cent in all varieties.

Accompanying the circulars announcing this second purchasing program are postal cards bearing the information all offers must be submitted to the San Francisco offices of the control board not later than 6 p.m. Friday.

FIRST CHECKS MAILED

The board also announced today the appointment of Herman Mayer as its district representative in Southern California with headquarters at Ontario. He will be assisted by a staff of field men in carrying out the board's program and will serve as chairman of the district clearinghouse committee of six community members.

First checks covering down payments on the purchases already made by the board in removing 375,000 tons of raisin grapes from the market by purchasing them on the vines for diversion, were mailed last night.

PLAYGOERS LOSE GEMS TO BANDITS

Woman Wearing $125,000 in Jewelry Robbed as Well as Companions

EVANSTON (Ill.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Jewelry to the value of $130,000 was taken from Mr. and Mrs. Jason F. Whitney and party of four early today by four young robbers at the point of their guns.

The party was en route home after attending a theater when the Whitney car was crowded to the curb by another automobile and four men leaped out flourishing revolvers. They began tearing jewelry from the women in the Whitney car.

In reporting the hold-up Mrs. Whitney told police her personal loss amounted to $125,000, including one ring of $50,000 value, which contained a fifteen-carat stone, five bracelets and a necklace.

Federal Agents Make Huge Haul

NEW ORLEANS Sept. 6. (AP)—Five thousand sacks of liquor, estimated to be valued at $250,000, were seized today by Federal prohibition agents in a marsh near De La Croix Island.

The liquor was in five trucks which were without drivers when the officers reached the marsh.

SEARCH STARTED FOR MISSING SPORTSMAN

LIVERMORE, Sept. 6. (AP)—Scores of men tonight searched the tangled Alameda Creek district, near here, for A. E. Fischer of Hayward, missing thirty-six hours. Fischer disappeared while on a deer-hunting expedition with Bart Russell, also of Hayward. Russell said he heard one shot after he parted from Fischer but paid little attention to it. When Fischer failed to meet him at the agreed time Russell started a search. Friends said Fischer knew the district well.

HAMMOND (IND.) BANK CLOSES ITS DOORS

HAMMOND (Ind.) Sept. 6. (AP)—The People's Co-operative Bank was closed today upon orders of the State Banking Department. The bank, capitalized at $100,000, held savings deposits of more than $1,000,000. J. G. Ibach formerly judge of the Indiana Appellate Court, is president. This was the second Hammond bank closed recently.

THEATER DRAWS FULL HOUSE

Why Manager Fools Crowd and Makes Them Like It

MARIENWERDER (East Prussia) Sept. 6. (AP)—How a Moscow theater manager contrived to fill his house with a paying audience was told in a newspaper here.

He advertised that at the end of the performance an "extra number" would be presented and that anyone who did not like it had only to say so and the entrance money would be returned tenfold.

The house was packed and the audience got ready to boo when the "extra number" was announced. It was the soviet official song, "The Internationale."

Not a single claim was made on the box office.

WOMEN ASK RIGHTS, NOT PRIVILEGES

Professionals in Club Meet at Monterey Vote Against Favoritism

MONTEREY, Sept. 6. (AP)—Equal rights with men in industry is the aim of working women as expressed in a resolution adopted today at the annual convention of the State Federation of Business and Professional Women at Asilomar. Equality, not favoritism, is demanded in the measure.

Convention leaders assured the members that any attempt by legislation to discriminate against women workers because of their sex will be vigorously fought.

Election of officers resulted in the return to the presidency of Ida M. Reed, San Francisco. Winifred M. Frye, Santa Barbara, was re-elected first vice-president. Others chosen included Monte Bedwell, Bakersfield, second vice-president; Dana Williams, Ontario, recording secretary; Bertha L. Aldrich, Los Angeles, treasurer, and Myrtle Harwell, Hollywood, auditor.

The convention concludes tomorrow.

HURLEY ASSAILS WAGE SLASHERS

Mississippi Contractors to be Investigated

Pay Cut Below Scale Set in Contracts

Secretary on Inspection Tour of River

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Indignant at reports that private contractors doing work for the government along the Mississippi have reduced the wages of their men below the scale set in their contracts, Secretary of War Hurley today ordered an investigation and subjected the contractors to a stinging rebuke at a luncheon before St. Louis officials and business men.

The Secretary reached here today on his tour of the Mississippi from St. Paul to New Orleans. He flew tonight to Tulsa, Okla., and made an address. The river expedition will be resumed Monday.

Secretary Hurley was aroused when told that one contractor, engaged in building wing dams for the government, had based labor costs in his contract upon a 45-cents-an-hour wage and later had taken advantage of the unemployment situation to cut the wages of his employees to 25 cents an hour. Other contractors had taken similar advantage of the surplus labor situation, the Secretary was informed.

The Secretary directed Lieut.-Col. George Spaulding, division army engineer for the Upper Mississippi, to inquire into the reports and present his findings. At the same time he issued a general order to army engineers to maintain the present level of wages paid by the government for river work, based upon the average wage of the vicinity in which the work is done.

CALTECH HAS EXPANSION PROGRAM OF EIGHTEEN BUILDINGS UNDER WAY

Construction will Cover Period of Ten Years; More Noted Scholars will Join Faculty; Residence Halls to be Like No Others

An expansion program under way which comprises the erection of eighteen new within ten years, the California Institute of Technology, in Pasadena, has seven of this under construction with two more to start within two months. Dr. William B. Munro, of the executive council of the institute, says that this program marks the longest stride of the school since it was first established as a polytechnic high school in the 90's.

California Institute of Technology resumed the standard university in 1921 into two buildings on its from some barracks that two. The student body the endowment inadequate institution almost unmet of its immediate

BUILDINGS COMPLETED

Eighteen buildings contains eleven Of these seven are under construction, and two more will be started within a few months. Some of the school believe to be among new educational Laboratories have been located in accordance with a plan ten years ago by the late G. Goodhue of Chicago, designed the buildings of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Everything has been fitted into the Caltech plan.

Trustees of the California Institute believe that it is not merely a facility and in the bricks and mortar, but as a help, but the educational institution in the last analysis the question. And so they point to the additional Caltech teaching staff in the past decade as having more notable than the architectural buildings. Some of the faculty and scientists of these have been brought here, and more are coming. Dr. Arthur H. Compton, a distinguished visitor from California, during the Huntington Library, expressed his opinion that the "Big Ten" of the California Institute constitute a group assuring the success of any institution. These are the men who were named:

Dr. George Ellery Hale, America's foremost astrophysicist, former director of the Mt. Wilson Observatory, now chairman of the astronomical council at the institute.

Dr. Robert A. Millikan, winner of the Nobel Prize, director of the Norman Bridge Laboratory of Physics, and chairman of the institute's executive council.

Dr. A. A. Michelson, also Nobel prize winner, formerly head of the department of physics at the University of Chicago, now research associate in physics at Caltech.

Dr. A. A. Noyes, formerly acting-president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, now director of the Gates Chemical Laboratory.

Dr. Thomas Hunt Morgan, former head of the department of biology at Columbia University, president of the National Academy of Science, now director of the William G. Kerckhoff Laboratories of Biology.

EX-HARVARD MAN

Dr. William B. Munro, formerly professor of history and government at Harvard, president of the American Association of University Professors, now chairman of the Caltech faculty.

Dr. Max Farrand, formerly professor of history at Yale, now director of the Huntington Library and associate in history at the California Institute.

Dr. Theodore G. Soares, who begins his duties as professor of ethics this autumn, a nationally-known scholar, formerly at the University of Chicago.

Dr. Richard C. Tolman, professor of physical chemistry.

Dr. Harry Bateman, professor of mathematics and theoretical physics and fellow of the Royal Society of Great Britain.

To this group might be added the names of Dr. Eric T. Bell, one of the country's outstanding mathematicians; Dr. Paul Sophus Epstein, who has a high reputation on two continents as a theoretical physicist; Theodore Von Karman, who has assumed the headship of the work in aeronautics; Dr. F. J. Ranscome, the geologist, and a half dozen others.

NUMBERS LIMITED

The Caltech undergraduate body is limited to 160 new students a year. This gives a total undergraduate body of about 500. No student is admitted to the California Institute except by rigid examination. No student is ever admitted on school credits. It is the only collegiate institution west of the Mississippi that enforces this rigid requirement of admission examinations on prescribed subjects to be taken by everyone, no matter who he is or what school he comes from.

The establishment of the Balch Graduate School of the Geological Sciences is one of the notable events of the past year in the history of the institution. Two handsome new buildings, to house this school, will be erected within the next six months. Both are gifts from friends of the institute who desire to remain anonymous for the present. The combined cost of these new geology buildings, with their equipment, will be about $500,000. Prof. James P. Buwalda, formerly of Berkeley, is at the head of this work, with Dr. F. L. Ransome as his associate and Dr. Chester Stock as paleontologist. The Balch Graduate School also has several other staff members, and more will be added, for it is the intention of the school to undertake geological explorations on a considerable scale.

PIT FOR LABORATORY

The astrophysics laboratory, which has been started, will have a pit sixty feet underground to house the long spectroscopic apparatus used in astronomical research. The members of this department will work in co-operation with the Mt. Wilson Observatory and with the staff of the projected 200-inch reflector observatory when that unit is completed. When this new telescope is in operation, the world's center of astronomy will be definitely located in Southern California, and will attract research workers from every nation.

DEATH COMES TO W. W. TRITT

Assistant Superintendent of Schools Mourned

Funeral Services will be Conducted Tomorrow

Educator Had Held Varied Positions in City

The career of W. W. Tritt, assistant superintendent of schools, one of Los Angeles' most distinguished educators who for more than a generation took a leading position in educational affairs, has been closed by death.

Mr. Tritt suffered an attack of indigestion Friday. It followed a seizure the Sunday before from which he was thought to be recovering. The second was more severe than the first and eventually ended in his death at 11 p.m. Friday.

Mr. Tritt was born in Sedalia, Mo., fifty-seven years ago. He and Frank A. Bouelle, superintendent, entered Los Angeles High School together as students forty years ago. Graduating from there, Mr. Tritt continued his studies at Los Angeles Normal School, graduating from there in 1899.

MANY POSITIONS

For two years he taught in Los Angeles county schools, becoming a teacher in Los Angeles city schools in 1896. He taught at the Eighth-street school under Dr. A. W. Plummer, principal. In 1896 he became principal of Amelia-street school. Two years later he assumed the same position at the Ninth-street school and in 1903 became principal of the Thirtieth-street school. In 1911 he became principal of the Thirtieth-street intermediate school.

In 1923 he became principal of the Belmont High School and in December, 1928, was elevated to the position of assistant superintendent of schools.

He was president of the Junior High School Principals, of the Senior High School Principals and of the High School Principals' Association.

FUNERAL TOMORROW

During his long service as an instructor of the growing generation, he served four years on the Los Angeles County Board of Education, and also as a member of the Council of Education of the California Teachers' Association. He was a member of the Phi Delta Kappa, the Skull and Dagger and Phi Kappa Phi.

He was Past Master of South Gate Blue Lodge, F. and A. M., and a member of Los Angeles Commandary, No. 9. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Laura Tritt, two sons, William Tritt, Jr., and Francis; a daughter, Margaret; a brother, Clarence H. Tritt, chief clerk of the Board of Education, and four sisters, Mrs. Pearl Legore, teacher at the Main-street school; Mrs. Maude Brownfield, Mrs. Mary Dennis, teacher at the Bible Institute, and Miss Jessie A. Tritt.

"MODES OF FALL" HERALDED

Mayor Calls Good Citizens to Aid Observance of Autumn Style Show Wednesday Next

The following proclamation calling upon Los Angeles citizens to join with downtown merchants in observing the forthcoming "Modes of Autumn" celebration was issued yesterday by Mayor Porter:

"It is again my privilege and pleasure to call the attention of our citizens to the annual celebration by downtown merchants of the Modes of Autumn.

"This event with the simultaneous unveiling of downtown store windows on the evening of Wednesday, next, signalizes the place of leadership which Los Angeles has won and is maintaining in the world of fashion and style.

"For three days we will celebrate our enviable position among the style centers of the world in a glowing pageant of color, heralding the coming of fall and of the new fall modes.

"The enthusiasm, loyalty, enterprise and skill which our downtown stores have displayed in co-operating to bring to Los Angeles this outstanding position in the world of style cannot but commend themselves to all our people.

"I, therefore, believe that our citizens should join with our merchants in celebrating this event. I earnestly urge that the evening of the 10th inst. be made a true gala affair and I join my own invitation to that of our downtown merchants in welcoming you to the downtown district during the unveiling ceremonies, for which an elaborate program has been planned.

"In the past we have made much of this autumn style festival. Let us this year make of it a vast community celebration; for this year, more than ever before, the eyes of the entire world will be focused upon our contributions to the world of style."

TWO DEAD, ONE DYING IN CRASHES

Woman and Child Lose Lives and Five Others Hurt in Accidents

Two people are dead, one is near death and several persons are in hospitals suffering from injuries as the result of automobile crashes near here yesterday.

Mrs. Bonnie Goble, 815 Raymond avenue, Santa Monica, died following an accident at Second and Pacific avenue, San Pedro, early yesterday. A motorcycle burst into flames following the collision. The victim suffered a severed leg and terrible burns from which she died later.

Two sailors also were hurt in the accident. They were riding a motorcycle which struck an auto. George P. Stewart, sailor on the U.S.S. Idaho, also on the motorcycle, suffered second-degree burns, and his companion, Harold Sweeney received an injured foot. Both are held at Los Angeles General Hospital on a charge of suspicion of manslaughter. J. T. Agajanian, driver of the auto, sustained minor contusions.

Last night, 10-year-old Georgia Thompson, 135 Freeman avenue, Hawthorne, was killed in a collision at One Hundred and Fourteenth street and Vermont avenue. Her mother, Mrs. J. P. Thompson, and Mrs. Jennie Dean, of the same address, were badly cut and bruised and were given treatment in the Georgia-street Receiving Hospital. The second machine was driven by Lynn Reynolds, 11881 Bonicia street. He was uninjured.

Mrs. Mary Bratteasni 36 of 383 Eleventh street, stepped off the curb at Ninth and Mesa streets at 1 p.m., and was struck by a car driven by Ephim J. Kasper, 1141 West Eighth street. She is in San Pedro General Hospital with a frontal fracture and broken left arm, and her condition is declared grave.

LEADER OF METHODISTS SUCCUMBS

Dr. George Preston Mains, Author and Educator of Church, Dies at Ripe Age

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

ALTADENA, Sept. 6.—Rev. George Preston Mains, D.D., LL.D., who until his retirement in 1916 was a nationally known leader in the affairs of the Methodist Episcopal Church and was the author of many books on religious topics, died tonight after a long illness at his home, 2401 North Holliston avenue, this city. He was 86 years of age.

Born in Newport, N. Y., his university education, begun at Wesleyan University, was interrupted by service in the United States Navy during the Civil War. Later he obtained degrees from that university and also Syracuse University and was ordained in 1870.

He filled pastorates in several eastern cities, including Brooklyn and New Haven, and in 1896 he was appointed to his first national office in the church, that of publishing agent, which he held until his retirement. He also served a term as president of the New York Preachers' Meeting, another as president of the New York Wesleyan Club; was presiding elder of the New York Eastern Conference, then was secretary of that conference for eight years; he was a delegate to seven central conferences of the church and was a member of the board of managers of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society and the treasurer of the Episcopal Fund. He had also been a trustee of Syracuse University for a number of years.

He leaves two daughters, Mrs. Jessie May Strong of Altadena and Mrs. Mary Pearl Howland of Mount Vernon, N. Y. Funeral arrangements will be made by Ives & Warren of Pasadena and will be announced tomorrow.

CITY ATTRACTS TRAFFIC STUDY

St. Louis Officials Arrive to Get Pointers

Methods Here Declared to be Outstanding

Los Angeles Lauded for Its Progressive Program

Inspecting traffic conditions in the United States and Canada, Capt. Robert B. Brooks, director of streets and sewers, St. Louis; Charles L. Cunningham, deputy controller of that city; the six members of the legislative committee of the St. Louis Board of Aldermen and the clerk of that body, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday from San Francisco and registered at the Biltmore.

"We have saved the best for the last," said Capt. Brooks, in telling of the party's itinerary.

Capt. Brooks said the members of his party are looking forward to a survey of traffic-control methods in use here because of this city's nation-wide reputation as a leader in regulating the flow of automobiles and pedestrians in its congested area.

ST. LOUIS PROGRAM

"Los Angeles has more traffic problems than any other city in the world," said Capt. Brooks, "and it has done wonders to meet those problems. I believe Los Angeles has INTRODUCING Clarice, the beautiful Marathon dancer.

Clarice has been for fighting twenty-four hours per day since the middle of May. When I saw her she had just finished her 827th hour . . . asleep on her feet.

EIGHT MEALS PER

In the beginning, there were seventeen couples in the contest. There are now five sets of dancers wearily staggering around the floor.

They are allowed to rest fifteen minutes in every hour. One hour out of the twenty-four they are permitted to leave the floor and bask in the golden sunshine or go shopping.

They eat eight meals during the twenty-four hours; three regular feeds and five snacks. And they eat them all standing up—in recognition of the fact that they have to eat during the dancing time.

THE GRAND ENTRANCE

I arrived just in time for the triumphal entrance of the merry dancers, after one of the rest periods.

The orchestra played the stirring Sousa march "Stars and Stripes Forever." I have seen the Kaiser's great infantry regiments goose-stepping down Unter den Linden to that tune. I have seen our own battalions thundering down Broadway to the trans-ports to the tune. Perhaps the air has been dramatized in my imagination. At any rate I wasn't prepared to see ten bedraggled somnambulists with weary legs crawling in — sagging at the knees.

WAKING CLARICE

The beautiful Clarice was fast asleep on her feet. They held her up at both flanks as her tortured feet stuck out alternately in front of her. They tried to shake her awake, but Clarice was in dreamland and wasn't for coming out.

Finally a husky trainer wetted the end of a bath towel and swatted Clarice in the face. She raised her head; peered at him reproachfully from heavy half-open eyes; then slipped back to bye-bye land. Finally the trainer dipped the towel in ice water and made a mask around Clarice's face and gave it a rubbing grater motion across her classic nose which brought her sleepily back.

THE TAP DANCER

Her partner, by this time was out on the floor doing a tap dance for the quarters and half-dollars tossed out to him. If you have never seen a young gentleman tap dancing after he has

CALTECH MAKES GREAT STRIDES

Eighteen New Buildings will Rise Within Decade

"Big Ten" of Faculty Hailed as World Leaders

Establishment of Graduate School Notable Event

Education Board has also made possible the erection of the new machine laboratory. The first task of the men and equipment in this building will be the construction of the myriad delicate parts for the new 200-inch reflecting telescope to be erected somewhere in Southern California. The exact location is not yet determined. This giant observatory will belong to the California Institute and will be used as a part of its facilities for instruction and research in astrophysics.

PLANES TO BE USED

Although the location of the giant telescope has not been determined, Dr. Munro has announced that the selection of the site will depend largely upon an available airplane landing field, after the factors of elevation and visibility have been determined. He explained that it is the opinion of those who will work with the giant lens that aviation will play an important part in the future work of science. Observers will visit the mountain top selected for the telescope, complete their observations there, fly back to Pasadena and continue their studies in the ground aboratories and it will all be accomplished within a few hours.

Dr. Munro, who has immediate charge of the planning and erection of the new Caltech student houses on behalf of the executive council, says these residence halls will be unique institutions of their kind. They are grouped around central courts with a common kitchen serving all four residence halls. Each house has its own dining-room, accommodating about seventy-five students, and each also has its own lounging room. The bedrooms are grouped into apartments of from five to nine rooms each, thus permitting an intimacy of life in small groups. Each of these apartments has its own separate entry from one of the interior courts. Together the four houses will accommodate 300 students. The total cost will be about $900,000.

NAMES OF HOUSES

These four undergraduate houses are to be known as Blacker House, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Blacker, who have long been residents of Pasadena; Ricketts House, in honor of Dr. Louis D. Ricketts of Phoenix and Pasadena; Dabney House, as a tribute to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Dabney of Los Angeles, and Fleming House, in honor of Arthur H. Fleming, president of the Institute board of trustees. Fleming House is the gift to the Institute from twenty of Mr. Fleming's friends and admirers. Gordon M. Kaufman of Los Angeles is the architect for all four buildings. William C. Crowell of San Marino is the contractor.

Destined to house many of the world's noted scholars, the Athenaeum has been described by Dr. Munro as a combination of an intellectual center and social club for the faculty of the institute, the staff of the Huntington Library and of the Mt. Wilson Observatory. It will also serve as a host house for distinguished visitors to the school, the library and the observatory. In addition to a spacious lounge, living and dining-rooms, twenty-four bedrooms have been provided and four suites for guests.

The Athenaeum will be ready for its formal opening in about a month. It will be one of the handsomest buildings in Southern California, and in its use will be unique among clubhouses. The building and it furnishings are the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Allan C. Balch of Los Angeles.

IDEALS REFLECTED

Speaking of the new Athenaeum, Mr. Munro said recently in an address to the Caltech alumni: "In ancient times there were two great cities which professed a desire to lead the world. These were Athens and Rome. Athens built an Athenaeum for intellectual intercourse, and it was characteristic of Athens. Rome built a stadium for physical display, and that action was equally characteristic of Rome. Now in America, unhappily the tendency of our colleges and universities has been to follow the Roman rather than the Athenian example. The California Institute is rather distinctive, I think, in that the Athenaeum precedes the stadium. That single fact tells a good deal about Caltech's ideals."

The aims and purposes of the California Institute have been set forth by Dr. Millikan, chairman of the executive council, as follows:

"The institute conceives its peculiar task to be the advancement of knowledge and the intensive training of a small number of carefully selected and unusually endowed men for scientific, industrial and civic leadership.

LARGELY FOR RESEARCH

"It, therefore, seeks to be primarily a graduate and research center, with but small undergraduate body—numbers of graduates and undergraduates being roughly equal. Such a number of undergraduates is desirable, first, because the presence at the institute of a large number of productive older men furnishes an altogether unique educational opportunity for a group of youths capable of carrying on the torch in the next generation; and, second, because a limited amount of undergraduate instruction, with the atmosphere, contacts, and training which it provides, exercises a wholesome, broadening, and stimulating influence upon the research group itself, and in the long run increases its breadth of outlook and its ultimate efficiency."

Dr. Millikan said that the policy of the school will be to hold the undergraduate enrollment to 160 freshmen a year as at present and to provide as soon as feasible, at least thirty new scholarships of the average value of $500 each to be assigned to a particular region of the United States and to be competed for by the highest-grade

"The institute," continued Dr. Millikan, "also proposes to bring its work in the humanities, that is, in history, literature, economics and philosophy, right up to the plane now occupied by the fundamental sciences. It proposes to add to its staff an additional group of outstanding scholars in these fields during the next few years."

St. Louis Officials Seek Los Angeles' Aid

been 627 hours on the dance floor, you have missed something.

Clarice sighed heavily. "Now I'll have to lug that hoss around on my shoulder the rest of the night," she said in a discouraged voice.

HER RIGHT HOOK

One young lady saw her partner going to sleep in her embrace. She hauled off and gave him a right hook on the chin. Suddenly awakened, he swung widely out into the empty air, looked sheepish and they wearily dragged their feet along.

THE REWARD

If Clarice wins the contest she and her partner will get $1000 between them. Otherwise she gets some kind remarks from the management. Meanwhile she picks up what she can, singing over the loud speaker. I don't know what destiny holds for Clarice in the way of fame, but it will not be as a prima donna. However, she picks up $4 or $5 a night from the floor.

HER TRAGEDY

Like most of the Marathon dancers, Clarice came to Hollywood to be a motion-picture star like Mary Pickford. She found Hollywood cold. She was too fat. She figured that the Marathon might kill her, but it would give her back her girlish figure. But alas, Clarice has been in fourteen Marathons and gets fatter with each. Thus far she has gained ten pounds in this one.

VICKIE DROPS OUT

Vickie had to drop out last night. Vickie sat in a chair bowed over like Rodin's "Thinker" while the quarters jingled at his feet. I noticed that his grief was not too great for him to give a sidelong squint at each tinkle. All the surviving dancers formed a procession and marched past him; the girls all kissed him and the men shook his hand. They all seemed grateful for the chance to lean on his bowed shoulders for an instant.

SWEET SLUMBER

Vickie will not be allowed to go to sleep right away. The doctors will let him sleep for three-quarters of an hour; then wake him for fifteen minutes. The second day he will be allowed to sleep in two-hour snoozes; three hours the third day until he is back to normal. Otherwise he might never wake up.

One night the management put the cots out on the floor by way of an exhibition of sleeping beauties. Clarice was sound asleep before they could spread her out properly on her cot. She just fell over into the bed. Her partner, one night, went to sleep on his feet; fell over on his face and since has tripped the light fantastic wrapped up in surgical bandages.

more traffic than any other city in the country."

St. Louis, members of the party said, is engaged on a big program to relieve its traffic situation. Plans are under way to double-deck one street, providing between eight and ten traffic lanes on each level, with the upper street for high-speed traffic and the lower avenue for trucks and other slower-moving vehicles. Other vast enterprises are being considered and the trip around the country was undertaken that the St. Louis city officials might gain first-hand information of the steps taken in other cities.

COST OF DELAYS

"Recent studies in Washington have shown," said Capt. Brooks, "that lost time to automobile passenger cars is worth 1 cent a minute and to trucks 2.9 cents a minute. We estimate that traffic delays are costing St. Louis $125,000 a year, on that basis."

Los Angeles' Major Traffic Plan drew praise from the visitors. Formulation of the plan enabled the city to build along definite lines, meeting the problems of the day and preparing as well for those that might be expected to develop in the future, Capt. Brooks declared.

The visitors were outspoken in their admiration of Los Angeles' success in controlling pedestrian traffic. They declared that they believed the traffic cells exerted a psychological check upon pedestrians.

DOWNTOWN PARKING

Elimination of downtown parking is also being studied by the St. Louis officials, who said that a check by department stores in Chicago, where parking in the Loop district is prohibited, disclosed that only 1½ per cent of the purchases made on a test day were by persons who had traveled to the downtown business area in private automobiles.

Besides Capt. Brooks and Controller Cunningham, the visitors are: Edgar Nicolai, clerk of the Board of Aldermen, and the following members of the legislative committee of the board: Wilbur Schwartz, William Niederluecke, William Hoefle, Morton Lohman, Louis Lange and John Neu. Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Brooks are also in the party.

The group will leave Los Angeles Tuesday. They have visited Chicago, Minneapolis, Vancouver, B. C., Seattle, Portland and San Francisco.

FILM GROUP RESCUED BY WATER TAXI

Ben Lyon, Bebe Daniels in Screen Cast Taken Off Yacht After Boiler Blast

Use of water taxi saved an entire motion-picture troupe, including Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels, from an all-night siege on a disabled steam yacht several miles off Catalina Island Thursday night, it became known yesterday. The two picture players, together with fifteen extra girls, camera men and technicians were removed from the boat in a water taxi when a flue on the boiler blew out.

Reports that one of two boilers on the boat blew up and that all the passengers on the yacht Sultana put to sea in rowboats, were denied yesterday by William Guthrie, location manager for Warner Brothers, over long-distance telephone from the Isthmus.

Guthrie declared they managed to obtain a water taxi Thursday evening when Lyons and Miss Daniels were taken to Avalon and the balance of the company transported to the Isthmus. Nobody was injured nor did any one suffer from the experience, according to Guthrie. The Sultana made the Isthmus under her own power at 5 o'clock Friday morning.

The company is filming scenes aboard the yacht for "Ex-Mistress."

MAGAZINE READING ROOM OPENED AGAIN

The magazine reading-room of the Central Library will be reopened in its usual quarters with the entrance by way of Hope street today at 1 p.m., according to the announcement of City Librarian Perry. The room has been closed since June 15, last, to restore damage by fire. At least one-half the periodicals burned have been replaced by the public. Those who have gifts of magazines to make the library, may inquire at the magazine room as to numbers and titles needed.

MEXICO'S YOUNGEST FILM MAKER STUDIES TALKIES

Mexico's youngest motion-picture director and producer arrived in Hollywood yesterday to study the talkies. He is Senor Gabriel Soria, who looks younger than 22 years, which is his age. With quick gestures and many smiles he told of his ambition to make pictures as good as those produced here.

GABRIEL SORIA.

"Mexico is not lacking in good actors," said he. "Some Mexicans have become famous in Hollywood. What Mexico needs is equipment and directors who know how to make pictures as good as those you produce. And they must be as good, for Mexicans know what is good and what is bad. They have been seeing American-made pictures for a long time and, though they would like to see pictures that are produced in their own country, they will not be satisfied unless they come up to the American standard."

Senor Soria is not a stranger to Los Angeles and Hollywood. Several years ago Revista Excelsior, the Mexican newspaper, sent him to the University of Southern California to acquire an education. He studied there and later learned enough about picture-making to return to his native land and produce the first newsreel with Mexican-made apparatus. In the next eight months he produced ten pictures. He is staying at La Leyenda Apartments, 1737 North Whitley avenue, as a guest of Sidney Algier, formerly production manager for Tiffany studios.

GUARDIAN ASSISTS IN DIVORCE ACTION

Charles W. Russell, 65 years of age, asserted to be mentally and physically ill, yesterday brought a suit through a guardian asking for a divorce from Blanche W. Russell, 44. He asks for a separation and that his wife be compelled to pay him alimony of $100 a month. Mrs. Elva Gayle is the guardian. It is asserted that Mrs. Russell controls property valued at $15,000 which belongs to the husband. Russell accuses his wife of cruelty by failing to provide him with sufficient food; also that she frequently locked him in the house and remained away for long periods.

CITY HALL WILL BE CLOSED ON TUESDAY

The City Hall will be closed Tuesday in honor of Admission Day. Hearings and committee meetings scheduled for that date will be conducted Wednesday.

PLUMMER'S FOES DIG UP OLD ERROR

Book-keeping Discrepancy Corrected Long Ago Now Used in Political Fight

A discrepancy in book-keeping methods in the District Attorney's prohibition enforcement detail, corrected eighteen months ago but now resurrected for campaign purposes by political enemies of Capt. Clyde Plummer, candidate for Sheriff, was explained yesterday by both H. A. Payne, County Auditor, and Capt. Plummer.

The controversy arose over the disposition of funds derived from the sale of confiscated bootleggers' paraphernalia which were placed in the special secret service fund maintained by Capt. Plummer for investigations.

According to Auditor Payne, Capt. Plummer's attention was called to the matter and it was pointed out that the funds should be placed in the county treasury instead.

Capt. Plummer yesterday corroborated Payne's story and stated further that he has an account of every cent spent out of the fund with receipts and canceled checks showing that it was used to carry out liquor law enforcement investigations.

"It is merely an effort to embarrass me in view of the approaching election," said Capt. Plummer. "The matter was corrected long ago in a way that was satisfactory to both Mr. Payne and myself."

"Lost" Yacht Appears Again

At a time that about forty-five steam yachts started a search for Robert Jump, 38 years of age, said to have been lost in the steam yacht Ranger in a cruise around San Clemente Island, the small boat headed in for Avalon, Catalina Island, yesterday and later reported all aboard safe.

Jump, the son of James Jump, a wealthy sportsman and yachtsman, and a leader in the Jonathan Club and a member of the Tuna Club of Catalina, was reported to Asst. U. S. Atty. Doherty as having left San Pedro last Tuesday for San Clemente Island to pick up Phillip Utter and others of his party at Mosquito Harbor. It was expected that he would return yesterday morning and when he did not arrive on time fear was felt.

SAVING OF WILD LIFE DESCRIBED

British Columbian, Here to Boost Road Plan, Tells of Conservation Methods

Visiting Los Angeles in the interests of the Pacific International Highway, Maj. J. Gordon Smith of Victoria, director of information for British Columbia yesterday described the highly satisfactory administration of fish and game in his province. With a State-wide fish and game conservation measure to come before California voters on the November ballot, the success of the Canadian plan is said to be of especial importance, in view of the fast-disappearing wild life of this State.

"The regulation of British Columbia's vast supply of fish and game is, and has been for many years, wholly removed from any political influence," said Maj. Smith. A chief game warden, with highest ideals of conservation and sportsmanship, is given power to fix conditions for the taking of all manner of wild life in the Province.

"Under this system, the waters are teeming with fish and the forests and ranges maintain a moose, elk and caribou supply that has not shown the least sign of depletion in the face of civilization's encroachment and foreign sportsmen's increasing visits.

"The coastal highway is open now in British Columbia as far north as Haselton, and surveyors are at work on the remaining 800-mile stretch to the Alaska border. This extension will open new territory rich in fish and game, as well as in lead, copper, silver and gold deposits.

"Branches will tap the many inlets along the coast and create an outlet for their products and a market for commodities of the large manufacturing centers of Canada and the United States.

"With the progressive element of both Americas co-operating as they are in this great project, an inestimable amount of good is bound to result."

Three Operas to be Analyzed

Mrs. Gertrude Ross, composer and pianist, will give three interpretations of operas to be presented at the coming season of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association at Bullock's Wilshire commencing next Friday.

The program will be given in the lounge and the first to be presented will be "Salome." On Friday, the 19th inst., "Mignon" will be interpreted, and the program will conclude on the 26th inst. with "The Girl of the Golden West." Mrs. Ross wrote the entire musical score for the Hollywood "Pilgrimage Play."

Flint Slayer Due Wednesday

D'Orr Announces Fight to Go to High Court

Convicted Man Moody in Cal

Fighting to save Frank [illegible] slayer of Motley Flint, who was declared sane by a jury [illegible] fense Counsel Paul S. [illegible] Thomas Reynolds announced that a motion for a new trial will be made next [illegible] when the former shoe salesman is brought before Superior Judge Schauer for sentence.

An appeal from the jury's finding of sanity, which means that Keaton must be sentenced to pay the death penalty, will be taken [illegible] ing to his attorneys if the motion for a new trial is denied by Judge Schauer. After the appeal is denied, the matter will be carried to the Supreme Court, it was announced yesterday.

NEW EVIDENCE PROMISED

In the meantime Deputy District Attorneys Burgess and William [illegible] prosecuted the slayer at the Saturday gathering will present evidence which may be brought before the court at the time Keaton is called to assist the judge in determining the degree of the crime and the penalty. Judge Schauer said the law may sentence Keaton to life imprisonment, or to the gas chamber for second-degree murder.

According to Burgess, the maximum penalty will be requested by the District Attorney's office, as the case is again called before Judge Schauer. The [illegible] Burgess declared, was a premeditated murder and, therefore, Keaton should pay the penalty as any other murderer.

KEATON REMAINS CALM

Locked in his cell in the basement row in the County Jail, Keaton yesterday continued to refuse interviews with newspaper men, [illegible] ecoging to his jailers, as he has the same moody demeanor which followed the [illegible] yesterday morning he read a number of books from the jail library, but spent most of the time on his jail cot.

Keaton was arrested a week ago last, when he walked into the office of Judge Collier's courtroom and shot Flint to death as the latter was leaving the courtroom after having given testimony in a civil action. Later Keaton declared that he had lost a considerable sum on the stock market and placed the blame on Flint as being connected with the crash of the Petroleum Corporation. He entered a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity after admitting the slaying. He was found sane by a jury of men and six women after a few hours of deliberation.

News That Thousands Can Use

Week by week Farm and Garden Magazine of The Sunday Times presents timely advice to agricultural people as well as estate and home owners who are interested in the unusual pattern of our country and suburban life in the great Pacific Southwest.

Farm and Garden Magazine

brings a week-by-week picture of our varied agricultural activities to the town dweller while at the same time supplying large and small ranch operators with reports of practical methods and practices that can be employed profitably on their own places.

It is unusual to find in a metropolitan newspaper an attractively printed, beautifully illustrated magazine of this character. No publication compares with Farm and Garden Magazine in service rendered to so many thousands of readers throughout the Southland who are interested in things that grow in field, orchard or garden or about the home premises.

Farm and Garden Magazine has for years given its unique and widely appreciated service to Sunday Times readers. It collects and disseminates news of growing and marketing, stories of interesting personalities and first hand experiences of those having to do with our widely varied agricultural program.

You will enjoy reading today's issue.

Oldsters' Picnic Goes to Jig Tunes

Dancin' on the Green

Above—Mrs. Margaret Cochran, 82 years of age, playing harmonica, accompanied by A. D. Farmer with drum. Below—Galusha Cole and Fayette Nelson.

SCORES of young-old folk who, nineteen years ago attended the old folk picnic at Sycamore Grove Park and who have attended every succeeding annual rally, greeted one another again yesterday at the party given for them by the Federation of State Societies with C. H. Parsons, secretary, in charge of the program.

Galusha Cole of Pasadena, 104 years of age last August 15, was the honored guest, and oldest member of the party, a close second being V. F. Zoroaster of Watts, who is 103 years of age. Among other oldsters were C. W. Hamilton, 93; C. R. Campbell of Sunland, 97; S. P. Howard of Oxnard, 96, and E. W. Easton, 96 years of age. More than twenty couples married for more than fifty years, participated in the program of songs, dances and addresses.

Among the entertainers were A. D. Farmer, 91 years of age, official drummer for the Federation of State Societies, and Mrs. Margaret Cochran, who came from Altadena to show her friends that a small matter of 82 years need not prevent a woman from dancing the "Irish Washerwoman's Jig" and playing a harmonica at the same time.

DANCE MASTERS CLOSE SESSION

New Steps will be Done in Slower Tempo

Plans Laid for National Meet Here Next Year

Thousand Teachers Expected to be in Attendance

Thoughts of the Associated Dancing Teachers of Southern California leaped ahead one year yesterday at the concluding session of the organization's annual convention in the Biltmore.

"All of our efforts will now be directed to making a success of the national convention of the Dancing Masters of America in Los Angeles the latter part of July and the first part of August," said Ernest E. Ryan, president of the Southern California organization.

To further plans for the national gathering, which is expected to attract between 800 and 1000 dancing teachers from all parts of the country, the Southern California teachers have called a special meeting for November 9.

The convention which closed yesterday was declared by the president and other officers to have been one of the most successful and harmonious of the organization's annual gatherings. Two business sessions were held. Other sessions were devoted to study of the latest developments in dancing. It was declared that the tempo of dances in 1931 will be somewhat slower than in the last year.

Man Beaten and Robbed

Beaten almost into insensibility after his car had assertedly been forced against the curb at Franklin avenue and Cheremoya street by two men in another machine shortly before noon yesterday, B. L. Franklin of 5967 Franklin avenue was robbed of twenty-two shares of corporation stock valued at $100 a share, he told Hollywood detectives.

The victim said he was riding with D. W. Welbert of 1236 North La Brea avenue when the two bandits, one of whom he declared he recognized as an acquaintance, drove alongside of their car and pocketed them in such a way that escape was impossible.

One of the men then leaped upon the running board of Franklin's car, he said, and struck him violently on the jaw with his fist. When he recovered his senses the robbers had fled.

Detectives are seeking the man named by the victim.

COSTELLO BALM SUIT GIVEN UP

Actress Who Had Sought $100,000 Dismisses Action and Refuses Comment

A breach of promise suit against Maurice Costello, film actor, brought by Miss Vivienne Sengler, actress, asking $100,000, suddenly terminated yesterday when the young woman appeared at the Courthouse and dismissed her action without prejudice. This means that Miss Sengler can file another suit at any time.

The woman, known as Rita Vivian, refused to comment on her action.

"All that I care to say at this time is that I am leaving for New York early next week," she stated.

In her petition against Costello, former matinee idol and father of Mrs. John Barrymore and Helene Costello, film actresses, Miss Sengler asserted that he proposed marriage to her in Stockton on September 10, 1928, and that there was a mutual agreement that the wedding should take place on April 22, 1929. The suit was begun last December.

At the time of the filing of the action against him Costello denied that he had ever proposed to Miss Sengler. He said he met her when he was playing vaudeville at San Francisco; that he took her to dinner several times but never proposed marriage to her.

REPRESENTATIVE BOOSTS MEXICO TOURIST TRAVEL

Rafael de la Colina, who will assume his duties here as Mexican Consul tomorrow morning, yesterday issued an invitation to residents of Southern California who plan tours in Mexico, either for pleasure or for business, to use the facilities of the Consulate for whatever information they may need.

"Los Angeles is doubly important as a consular post," Senor De la Colina said, "first, to us as the largest center of Mexican population outside of Mexico City, and, second, for the amount of tourist traffic that passes through here.

"Citizens of the United States who contemplate travel in Mexico will be more than welcome here in the Consulate and we will endeavor to help them in every way possible. The Mexican people and their government are genuinely anxious for cordial relations with the people of the United States and if there is anything that the Consulate can do to promote that feeling we are here to do it."

The new Consul will take the place of F. A. Pesqueira, who has been transferred to Nogales, Ariz., after five years' service here. Senor De la Colina has moved his consular quarters to a large suite of offices in the Union League Building, Second and Hill streets, and said that within a short time he will probably increase his staff.

ZANE GREY CLEARED OF PLAGIARISM

"The Thundering Herd" Not Stolen from Cook's Book, Judge Decides

Zane Grey's story, "The Thundering Herd," was not stolen from the story, "The Border and the Buffalo," by John R. Cook, now dead, it was decided yesterday by United States District Judge Cosgrave.

While praising the work of Cook as a narrative of early times in the West, Judge Cosgrave held that Zane Grey had resorted merely to historic facts in writing and producing "The Thundering Herd." It was pointed out by the court that whereas "The Border and the Buffalo" is merely a narrative, "The Thundering Herd" is a love story wrapped around conditions which existed throughout the West at the time of the story.

The court also pointed out that many authors have turned to the romantic plains and the buffalo.

The court ordered that the plaintiff pay court costs but not attorney fees.

Charles A. Maddux was plaintiff as assignee of Alice V. Schmidt, widow of the writer of "The Border and the Buffalo."

Today's Bible Text

Now we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly, comfort the feebleminded, support the weak, be patient toward all men.—I Thess. v, 14.

GILT-EDGED

Joan Nowlan has been chosen queen of red-heads in New York from a class of 100 flaming competitors. Her picture will set fire to the cover of a new popular song dedicated to blazing redheads. Hollywood might as well have her fire-extinguishers in order. Other cities are faithfully picking out their beauties to save us the trouble.

COSTLY PONIES

The other day a Buffalo sportsman coughed up $10,000 for an Argentine polo pony. This is a stiff price for a single dinky little mount, but the Buffalo man thinks it worth it. They have been producing a superior grade of polo mustang in the Argentine and the Americans scour the world for the best when they cannot raise them themselves.

NOTHING DOING

One oil company has spent more than $3,000,000 in drilling in what was thought to be a very promising new field in New Jersey, but has never drawn a pint of the stuff. Now they are moving their machinery and equipment to Texas, where they expect to find better conditions. It is hard to tell what will happen in the oil business. It is full of uncertainties and surprises.

ANOTHER KNOCKOUT

Gene Tunney has achieved another knockout. However, it was not on the program. When he was married, his bride's name appeared among the elite in the social register. In the latest edition of that discriminating piece of literature, her name is omitted. In passing it might be said that when Lindbergh married Miss Morrow, her name was in the same volume. Now Lindy's appears alongside of it. Thus do wings supplant big fists in the turn of the wheels of time.

ITALY CLEANS UP

A sanitary commission from New York has been in Europe studying the situation in various foreign cities. They report that the Italian towns they have visited are clean and sanitary. They have excellent systems for the collection and disposal of garbage and there are health inspections—and everything. The New Yorkers must have found things much different from what they were some years back. Mussolini must have been busy with the big broom. Italian cities used to be remembered for their filth and the reckless manner of the disposal of garbage. The new Italy at least is cleaner for Il Duce.

PLAYING FOR RAIN

During the recent drought in the Middle West a group of business men in a Minnesota town started an endurance contest in card playing. At any rate they began a game of rummy and said that they would never halt or pause until rain fell. They started on Monday night and there was no rain until Saturday morning. So by day and night for a week the monotonous round of dealing and playing went on and a couple of dollars changed hands. There were occasional changes in the personnel at the table, but the game went on. At home the lonely wives were praying for rain. At the barber shop they played for it. In time they got it.

SOLDIERS OF THE CROSS

A New York statesman has a noble project which would be received with enthusiasm by our generals and colonels—maybe. He would enlist our Regular Army under the humane banner of the Red Cross and let the troops carry their great organization into the humane work of the country. They could fight the forest fires and supply the needed human relief to cope with flood and drought. Their ability to mobilize rapidly in any part of the country is a notable asset in emergencies. The statesman intimates that this experience and the changing adventures would prove attractive to the soldiers who are now condemned to the monotony of barrack life. Incidentally the soldiers could police the national parks, help in reforestation and direct operations on Boulder Dam and other government works. Now watch the Secretary of War thrill with admiration at this program.

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS

The progress of Southern California during the past decade has not been confined to the things which show on the face of the census figures. It has not been a growth in population, wealth and industry alone, but a well-rounded development covering all the important fields of human interest and activity. Figures of bank clearings and building permits catch the public eye, for they are concrete manifestations which demonstrate beyond peradventure the abounding strength and vitality of this favored Southland; but even our own people, much less those in other regions of the country, have not yet awakened to a full appreciation of the equally great cultural advance which the community has made and is making. They do not fully sense, perhaps, the forward strides that have been taken in things of the spirit, in the sphere of the intellect, and in the community's genuine response to the artistic aspirations of its people.

As a matter of fact the progress of higher education in Southern California during the past ten years has been relatively more rapid than the advance in population, although the rest of the country may not realize it. It forms one of the most inspiring chapters in the chronicles of our recent past. The universities and colleges of Southern California have moved forward during this decade at a rate which has been equaled in no other part of the country. Take the California Institute of Technology as an illustration. In 1920 there were only two buildings on its yawning campus. Its endowment was of negligible proportions; its student body a mere handful. Its reputation hardly extended beyond the bounds of Los Angeles county.

Today this institution has eleven completed buildings, with seven more in process of construction. As set forth in detail elsewhere in today's Times, three additional ones are to be under way presently, making twenty-one structures that will be on the campus when the present program is completed. And the endowment of the institute has kept pace with this extraordinary expansion of its physical plant. The increase in resources has been more than twenty-fold within these ten years. Equally remarkable has been the strengthening of the faculty and research staff, which now includes within its membership at least a score of the most outstanding scientists and humanists in the country. These achievements, together with a rigidly hand-picked student body which now numbers more than 700 young men, have raised the California Institute to a place at the very pinnacle among institutions of its type not only in America, but throughout the entire world of scholarship.

Now the lesson in all this is instructive. It proves that a great fulfillment may come from a small adventure if the environment is right and the leadership wise. The destinies of the California Institute have been guided during these years by men of sound educational idealism whose determination has been to set quality above quantity at all times. Their fixed purpose has been to make the institute distinctive and indeed unique, in its high scholastic standards, its unrelenting pursuit of truth, its devotion to the immediate task in hand, and its unwavering allegiance to the cause of pure learning.

The outcome is justifying their faith. They have builded even better than they knew. The vision of Dr. George Ellery Hale, who many years ago foresaw the possibility of making Pasadena a notable center of scholarship, has now unfolded into a marvelous reality. The California Institute, the Mt. Wilson Observatory and the Huntington Library make up a trilogy of which any community might well be proud. Together they cannot fail to draw upon the best of the world's intellect as the years go by. And the new Athenaeum, that princely gift from Mr. and Mrs. Allan C. Balch which is now nearing completion on the Institute campus, will provide a unique forgathering place for all the prophets of truth and culture who may come.

MODERN WAR HORRORS

The movement to make war more horrible grows apace and it will soon be so that no civilized peoples will carry chips on their shoulders or go about hunting for trouble.

Our own War Department is taking an advanced place in this crusade. Some time ago it was mentioned that our fighting men had developed a tank that weighed about sixty tons and could be hurtled over the roughest terrain at the rate of forty miles an hour. It could take a paved road at seventy and climb trees and spill a dozen tons of bombs on the hapless soldiery in its path.

The foemen on seeing one of these hellish mechanisms approach would wait no longer. They would scoot for home and send their surender by mail.

Now the department has developed another unholy terror. This is none other than a musical truck. It is equipped with all the noise-making devices of a jazz band—in fact, it is rated as the equivalent of two full-fledged brass bands. But there are no individual performers—not even a drum major. There are phonographs, amplifiers and loud speakers and when the truck dashes down the pike it sounds like the advance agent of Gehenna. With the aid of this frightful machine an army can dispense with its musicians and use them to carry bombs and other lethal hardware. All that the truck needs is a driver and possibly that worthy can be dispensed with. When the musical truck blows into the sector the enemy will imagine that a whole army corps is approaching with all its bands bellowing defiance. They will not even wait to see.

It is believed that if the League of Nations would order about three of these trucks it could stop any war that ever started—and this without firing a shot.

The rough-spoken person who said that war is hell would be wide of the mark when it becomes possible for a general to telephone a few brief orders from headquarters and then go marching through Georgia at the rate of forty miles an hour to the fiendish accompaniment of a double-decked and high-powered brass band made up of mechanical robots whose ear for music was built by Henry Ford and Thomas A. Edison.

THE ONION

The soulful onion is not as unhappy as it seems from the quantity of tears it causes people to shed. In spite of this apparent pessimism, recent commendations have come from unexpected sources.

Tom Kane, New York ferryboat deckhand, has given transfusion of blood 111 times in fifteen years and announces in Liberty Magazine that he sometimes eats as many as twenty-four big Bermuda grief-producers in any many hours. He once granted three blood transfusions in ten days and says that he ate onions by the carload that week. He attributes his healthy supply of red corpuscles to this delectable, smelly vegetable.

At all events it has acquired new dignity. It may have had to sneak into the soup or hide in the stuffing in order to enter good society. It may have had to neutralize the worse taste of things to be accepted in business. But even then folks have been willing to stay at home from the function just to have it around and it has undoubtedly been the clandestine friend of the best families. It has had to make folks weep to hide its real purpose in life and seem the saddest when they are glad.

And now to find that it makes red blood gives it a big boost. It is now placed along with liver and spinach and oranges. When athletes begin to resort to it for strength and the anemic feed on it for fatness, it may demand a higher price and hold its head up even among roses.

DRESS AND THE DANCE

At the recent convention of dancing masters in New York it was conceded that the return of longer evening dresses meant a revival of the dreamy waltz. That is about the only step that really belongs to a trailing skirt. It gives the lady a chance to wear her garments gracefully and it was always a pleasant sight to behold a roomful of lovely women gliding over the floor to the sensuous music of the waltz.

The dancing instructors again asserted that jazz was going out. They keep on telling us that, but if it has gone it is not forgotten and a lot of the orchestras keep on playing it as if they had never heard of its demise. For one thing it dies hard and its death rattle can be heard for miles.

The masters of the dance say that the newest thing is the university drag, which is a waltzy affair stepped to four-four time and gives the lady the appearance of floating dreamily in the air. This will be all right with us, but the name sounds like something harsher.

LEE SIDE O' L.A.

BY Lee Shippey

Personal Glimpses of Famous Southlanders

STEPHEN FRENCH WHITMAN is credited by many critics with being the man who, more than anyone else, led the American revolt against machine-made fiction with happy endings adorned with morals to point each tale. He is as realistic as Dreiser, they say, without being as ponderous, as colorful as Conrad without being smitten with his sameness.

The critics who say such things are, of course, his friends. But, for that matter, most of the people who know him are his friends. He is a likable, unassuming, frank fellow who gives himself no airs, speaks the colloquial language and wouldn't give himself away as a literary man if you didn't happen to know it. He is a well-educated man on whom education took, a linguist who reads a good deal of European stuff au naturel and one who has fought a battle with ill health without thinking his troubles the most absorbing in the world. He'd rather talk about nearly anything else than about Stephen French Whitman. He is slight of build, delicate of features, unobtrusive of manner, and you have to know him pretty well to find out much about him. Who wouldn't like a man like that?

But it's a fact that Whitman's "Predestined" and Dreiser's "Sister Carrie" have been two outstanding examples and pillars of hope for those who dislike the machine-made novel. "Predestined" is credited with showing, more than any other book had up to that time, that a story of frustration rather than of the crowning of good deeds with triumph could succeed in America. "Sister Carrie" was a story of many frustrations, but in the end the heroine found herself. She was sailing ahead on an even keel when the story ended, in spite of all the frustrations, which probably wasn't as true to life as Whitman's stories. When Whitman's characters score a triumph it usually is like that of Conrad's in his great story, "Victory," which tells of victory very few of us have the spirit to win—and darned few of us would want to.

Not Afraid of Drama

Whitman was born in Philadelphia in 1880 and educated at Princeton. He became a reporter on a New York newspaper in 1901, began attracting attention as a short-story writer in 1903 and published his first novel, "Predestined," in 1910. He has lived in Italy a good deal but always kept himself American by reading American newspapers, though the somewhat melodramatic influence of Italian atmosphere frequently gets into his stories. In fact, he is rather notable for being a writer of melodrama, or near melodrama, which the critics love, for he is outstanding as a stylist, too, and is just independent enough to go ahead and write melodrama without apology if that is what the story seems to demand.

Oddly enough—for motion pictures are notoriously fond of saccharine endings—it was motion pictures which brought him to Los Angeles to write for the movies. But the atmosphere of the studios was poisonous to Whitman. He stayed here only a short while, going to San Francisco. But, like many another man, when he got away from Los Angeles he found he liked it better than he thought he had, and returned here to live. He makes headquarters at the University Club, though he lives with his mother in Hollywood. He has a "blind" telephone number and does his best to escape public notice.

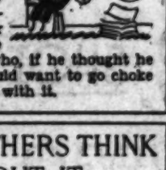
Don't Blame It on Him

"Predestined" caused a tremendous lot of talk, and Whitman's books were in demand. The next year another of his novels, "The Happy Ship," was published, and two years later another, "The Isle of Life." "Children of Hope" and "Sacrifice," two of his later novels, have been filmed, and though Erskine's "Helen of Troy" and E. Barrington's "The Ladies" generally are credited with having started the modern fad for fictional biography some astute critics point out that Whitman's story of Antony and Cleopatra, "That Famous Love Affair," antedated both and perhaps suggested to Erskine his lucky venture in writing "Helen."

But now that we're having so much "reconstructed history" which isn't history, maybe that is a doubtful honor anyway.

Doesn't Have a "Line"

Despite the fact that for several years he was too ill to write anything important, and only recently has recovered his health, though not his strength, Whitman recently completed his latest book in amazingly fast time—less than three months for a book longer than the average. When he works he works hard, throwing himself into the story so that he throws out everything else and writing twelve hours or more a day while the spell is on him. His latest book, he says, will be unlike anything he has written before, a wholly new kind of undertaking. For Whitman is the kind of author who, if he thought he had a "line," would want to go choke himself to death with it.



WHAT OTHERS THINK ABOUT IT

GLOOM IN NEW YORK

[New York Evening Post]

With deep regret we note that official returns from the final Assembly district show that the city of New York has increased its population by 1,335,315, or 23.8 per cent, since the 1920 census. There are many other mournful details. For the first time we have four boroughs in the million class; it is our largest decennial increase; we may surpass London's population in the next census.

Bad news, my masters; bad, depressing news.

Think what it means. Over a million more people to drive motors into our traffic jams, to crowd into our crowded subways, to turn radios into our radio din, to build horrible houses on our lovely suburban meadows. Over a million more people to stamp out more of the city's charm and comfort.

Thirty years ago Manhattan was a likable and livable place. Even ten years ago the incoming people had not forced us to make room for them by destroying the great mansions on Fifth avenue. Nor had they compelled us to cover Queens with miles of identical houses even now labeled our future slums. Nor had they led us to concentrate populations into topless towers at city centers.

No, we could get along beautifully without extra population. Our ideal should be that little city of Mill Hope, or something like that, which in the census returns gained .00014 of a person in the last decade. Consider how pleasant must life be there. No overcrowding. No changing neighborhoods. No tearing down of old landmarks; but peace and quiet.

New York doesn't need a "Watch Us Grow" movement. On the contrary, it ought to launch a big "Stop Our Growth" campaign.

The Welland Canal

[Indianapolis News.]

Nine-tenths of the traffic using the Great Lakes has been barred from Lake Ontario and the upper reaches of the St. Lawrence River. The Niagara peninsula, while severed, was not cut enough to give passage to vessels of deep draught. Fourteen years ago Canada undertook an improvement of the Welland Canal, lying within her boundaries. On September 1 the new channel, twenty-five miles long, will be formally opened. The engineering achievement, costing $122,000,000, promises to have wide effect on the movement of North American commerce, particularly wheat.

The extent of the change soon to be witnessed may be gathered from the fact that in the past no boat longer than 260 feet, or holding more than 35,000 bushels of grain, could pass through the old canal, and from sixteen to eighteen hours were required for the journey. The passageway now laid will accommodate 663-foot vessels, loaded with a cargo of 553,000 bushels, and the trip through the locks may be made in eight hours. Continued water transport to the Atlantic, through the St. Lawrence, will have to be by small boats, but one unloading at present necessary in export commerce with Europe will be eliminated by the Welland improvement. The contemplated deepening of the river on to the sea is related to negotiations between the United States and Canada for joint action, since the St. Lawrence is a part of our boundary for a short distance. The finishing of the Welland link in the route will give additional importance to the exchanges.

THE LEAGUE INDISPENSABLE

BY EDWARD C. KRAUSS

That, whether or not the League of Nations is effective, it is indispensable, is the half-paradox with which Prof. Gilbert Murray of Oxford, head of the League of Nations Union, begins a discussion in the current Harper's Magazine of what he considers the League's real function. Prof. Murray brushes aside lists of the League's accomplishments and failures as of no real consequence, and declares that without its machinery for settling "without too much friction the residue, large and always increasing, which is outside the control of national governments," world affairs would be in as unsatisfactory a state as international postal service without the international Postal Union.

The League, in his opinion, furnishes a place, through its permanent secretariat, where international disputes can always be debated, and frequently adjusted; and in co-operation with the World Court, where an approximation of international justice can be obtained.

"When one looks into the international anarchy which formed the ideal and to a large extent the practice of the nineteenth century, and which still dominates the Nationalist parties throughout the world, one is astonished to think that any international disputes were ever settled," says Prof. Murray. "That they were was not due to any machinery—there was no machinery; it was due simply to the good qualities of individuals who happened to be in a position of influence. The nations, in international matters, were like the invalids called 'bleeders' whose blood does not coagulate and who consequently are liable to bleed to death if they cut a finger. A doctor on the spot can save a 'bleeder;' good statesmanship could save the disputing nations. But as far as machinery went there was nothing to prevent things taking the worst course."

Prof. Murray instances the dispute between France and England over the status of residents in Tunis, who though born there of parents who were born there, nevertheless considered themselves British subjects and were so under British law. French law called them French nationals and tried to call them up for army service.

"Both contentions seemed plausible, and it would, I think, have been extraordinarily difficult for one government to give way to the other," says Prof. Murray, continuing that Great Britain brought the matter before the League Council, which in turn referred it to the International Court for an advisory opinion. The court held that the French protectorate was established and in part subject to international treaties and hence the disputed citizenship was not entirely a domestic matter. "That decision once given, France loyally accepted it and an arrangement was reached without any difficulty or humiliation to either side. No patriotic newspaper or politician in either country had a chance of attracting the limelight by stirring up national animosities."

"But suppose," he goes on, "we still lived, as many people still imagine we do, under the regime of sovereign independent states, each entirely mistress of its own acts, and each encouraged by its coat of arms to emulate the behavior of a lion, an eagle, a bear, or some other savage beast of small brain power, in the proud assertion of its independence. Suppose we lived under the conditions of the nineteenth century even, apart from the modifications which resulted then from the accidental wisdom or common sense of individual statesmen. What would have happened?"

The foreign offices would have debated the matter "with signs of rising temper," he answers; the discussion would have been taken up by partisan Nationalist newspapers, each giving its own side only; the respective publics would have become more and more excited and indignant, and the governments in reflex would have become more and more unreasonable until something exploded.

"Nobody would have been much to blame, nobody would really be wicked. But by the system of sovereign independent states every element that could work for strife and trouble would be automatically encouraged; every element that worked for peace, depressed or destroyed," he declares.

Prof. Murray points out that when the International Court was established, no nation was willing to accept its compulsory jurisdiction, that is, to agree to submit any and all specifically legal disputes to it and abide the decision. Now, he says, thirty-eight nations have signed, or agreed to sign, the "optional clause" of the court charter, including all the great-power members of the League.

"The ordinary means of coercion is publicity," Prof. Murray continues. "I do not mean advertisement, but the publication of some fact or the putting of some question in the Assembly. I have seen a great nation which was behaving badly absolutely coerced into decent conduct by a series of three polite speeches in the Assembly. The delegates of the nation in question simply could not bear the ignominy of the situation and compelled their government to change its course. I have seen again and again the extreme eagerness with which a nation labors to justify itself or to change its course of action under the pressure of publicity. The history of the drug traffic and the traffic in women and children provides several cases."

Prof. Murray asserts that the ordinary conception of the League as an instrument for forcibly stopping wars is erroneous. "The League's business," he says, "is to make peace a firm habit and international co-operation the normal method of human progress. The good schoolmaster is not he who resolutely throws disorderly pupils out of the windows."

There were, he says, thirteen separate wars ready to break out in Europe at the time the League was established, but ten years have passed with no war. They might have been prevented by some other concerted international action, he concedes, but the point is that the League prevented them.

"One sees," he concludes, "in the Assembly and Council the faults of this man or that; one of them vain, one lazy, one thinking chiefly of his career at home. . . . The extraordinary thing is that, met together in the atmosphere of Geneva, with the eyes of fifty-odd nations upon them, they do show a sensitiveness to general opinion and a consciousness of their duty not merely to their own voters, but to a wider constituency. The Nationalists become less Nationalist, the violent drop their violence, the boastful boast of their concessions and not of their victories; and almost every man goes home to some extent a missionary for a new cause to which his countrymen are not yet awake."

In this view the League has been a tremendous success in spite of its inadequacies and will become more effective as time goes on.

CALIFORNIA FAIRS

BY LANNIE HAYNES MARTIN

September is the month of fairs, feasts and fiestas all over the State of California. The city of Los Angeles revived its old fiesta days in the festivities of Olvera street on the fourth and fifth, when there were minstrelsy, street dancing, flower girls and colorful costumes to symbolize the gala spirit of the occasion, and to give expression to the love we still have for gayety, beauty, music and romance. A love which we have too long repressed and too often stifled.

Old friends were reunited, impulses of courtesy and kindness were revived and in the pageantry of the occasion the simplicity and genuineness of early days were brought back for a time. Such events are like a benediction on a community and produce effects far beyond the mere enjoyableness of the occasion.

The annual county fairs, also, have much of the same spirit. They tie people together in common interests and stabilize that fluctuating appreciation of state and country, which, when rightly fostered, becomes genuine patriotism. For California is like some great horn of plenty which pours out its prodigal products for man's need and pleasure.

People no longer go to county fairs to see who has raised the prize pumpkin of the year. They go to study new methods; to compare the results of their own activities with the accomplishments of others; they go to revel in beauty and to be thrilled by progress; and each succeeding year they are so astonished at the advancement made in everything from agriculture to aviation, from apple pies to art exhibits, that they never become bored or blase, and are thus preserved as normal, interested, enthusiastic citizens.

As one who has visited the fairs of Pomona, Ventura, Riverside and Bakersfield for the past ten or twelve years I feel competent to assert that no one who has watched the remarkable evolution of these exhibits can doubt the permanent trend of prosperity or fail to observe the accompanying growth in esthetics, in art perceptions, in civic consciousness. And the development of that community spirit is the measure of the progress of the world.

WHERE CAN I LEARN

Commercial Lettering?

BY LOUISE L. TEMPLE

[Prepared in co-operation with the Los Angeles evening high schools. Questions concerning free evening classes will be answered if stamped addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Louise L. Temple, care of The Times.]

A free class in advanced commercial lettering is offered by the Frank Wiggins Trade Evening School, 216 West Venice Boulevard, on Tuesday and Thursday evenings, 7 to 9. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 7 to 9 p.m., Mr. De Moulin, who instructs in this class, teaches sign painting. He is never too busy to give detailed advice to those who find trouble in adjusting themselves to a trade.

Those who have had no experience at all must train at Polytechnic Evening High School, 400 West Washington Boulevard, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, 7 to 9. Also beginners may go every school day to either of these schools.

Aerial Shop for Bridge Men

In constructing the new suspension bridge over the Rhine between Muelheim and Cologne, Germany, cable workers did part of their task in an aerial workshop, suspended from a crane. In placing the cables to support the bridge it was found necessary to bind them at various points with sleeves and clamps, which were attached under a pressure of 300 tons or more, so that a complete portable shop with many workmen was necessary.

Vienna, Austria, has added to its ordinances permitting policemen to collect fines for offenses seen by them. They now include crossing the street in the wrong place, boarding a moving street car, playing a piano too loudly, throwing paper on the street, and driving too fast or on the wrong side of the road.

THE UNEASY HEAD

When the gangster chief has risen to a high and fine old age, having dodged the coroner's prison, his condition's pretty great. Of a host he is the master, serf-like men around him stand, he can send them to their faster by the waving of a hand. And the weary, sad civilian must toil for bread and meat, look upon the gangster's mansion with some envy in their feet. But the chieftain isn't happy, he sits upon his throne, his enemies are scrappy, and his grouches are full grown. They are watching, they are waiting for a chance to get his goat, they are plotting, they are prating, they will hit below the belt. They are hiding in the bushes, they are crouching in the grass, they are all prepared to rush when the chance of slaughter comes. Oh, the gangster's life is stately, with his retinue of train, but his troubles burn him greatly, they are always on his brain. If he goes to get a meal there may come a shower of bullets or three feet of cold steel. If he looks out from his casement to behold the scene o'erhead, some one, maybe, may charge three pounds of lead. Bodyguards must walk behind him when he'd take a little stroll; such restrictions always bind him and put fetters on his soul. He is slow at taking chances, but in spite of all his care, doom upon his head advances and will take him unaware. Who would envy him his plunder, who would envy him his grim career where the automatic shotguns thunder? Need we say his faculties are clear.

TUESDAY MORNING Los Angeles Times SEPTEMBER 7, 1930.—[PART II.]

A careful driver for 20 years ---- never an accident—never a traffic violation

--- in a split second the crash came!

Mr. Carpp receiving check for $1000.00 from Los Angeles representative of the National Casualty Company.

His wife died as the result of injuries!

The death occurred May 27; proof was filed June 12 and on June 17, the husband was paid $1,000 through the Los Angeles Times Travel and Pedestrian Accident policy.

The Times Policy Costs Only $1

To Your Routeman or Agent

Sylvester M. Carpp, 1531 North Pacific Avenue, Glendale, California, with his wife seated beside him, was driving leisurely through Monterey Park. They drove along as the whirling bustle of traffic whizzed by. Deciding to turn to the left, Mr. Carpp put his hand out, giving the proper signal—the same kind of caution he had practiced for years. Out of the stream of traffic darted a car, cutting directly in front of him. Mr. Carpp let this menace of the highway pass. As he proceeded a veritable juggernaut of death charged broadside into his automobile with the force and momentum of a fifty mile an hour speed. Mrs. Carpp was thrown twelve feet from the car, suffering injuries from which she died.

While disaster is not a pleasant subject to discuss, common sense dictates that you should be protected through insurance against the tremendous hazards that surround you every minute. Mr. Carpp secured a travel and pedestrian insurance policy, issued by the Los Angeles Times. It cost him $1.00 a year premium. The Times paid him $1,000. OPERA 'BOHEME' TO OPEN SEASON

Perennial Favorite of Music Lovers on 29th Inst.

Singers Endeared to City Billed to Return

Three New Voices will Make American Debut Here

Los Angeles' grand opera season will open three weeks from tomorrow night with the presentation of "La Boheme" in the Shrine Auditorium. The series of operas will start Monday, the 29th inst. and end October 13.

The opening night of the season promises to be one of the most brilliant social events in the history of Los Angeles, Merle Armitage, manager of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, said yesterday. Southern California music lovers will welcome back several prominent singers who have appeared here before. Tickets for the opera now are on sale at Barker Brothers.

Beniamino Gigli, the greatest tenor since Caruso, according to many critics, will make his first local appearance in seven years, singing opposite Queena Mario, Metropolitan favorite, who has the role of Mimi. Gaetano Viviani, leading baritone at La Scala Opera, Milan, Italy, will make his first American appearance, although he was born in Baltimore. He has studied in Europe for a number of years. Edo Pinza, Metropolitan basso, is another favorite who will be heard in the first production.

Other world-famous singers who will take leading roles in the nine other operas to be presented are Maria Jeritza, soprano, who was a sensation here two years ago; Mme. Clare Clairbert, Brussels soprano, who will make her American debut, singing three roles; John Charles Thomas, baritone; Sidney Rayner, European tenor, who will make his American debut; Dorothee Manski, contralto, and Hope Hampton, former motion-picture star, who will sing "Manon."

The season this year will be one of the most elaborate in history, opera officials believe. More than $150,000 worth of scenery will be used in the ten productions, new sets having been built for "Salome," "Tannhauser," "Girl of the Golden West" and "Lucia."

ENROLLING IN PROGRESS AT LOYOLA

Catholic University to Exceed Former Years in Point of Registrations

Offering accommodations for both resident and nonresident students, Loyola University is holding its regular registration period with indications that enrollment will considerably exceed that of previous years.

Loyola will this year offer complete four-year courses in both the college of liberal arts and in the college of commerce and finance; standard three-year pre-medical and two-year prelegal courses; and standard lower division courses in civil, electrical and mechanical engineering.

Extensive additions and improvements in the laboratory, classroom and library facilities have been made during the summer months and a considerably enlarged teaching staff engaged.

Among the new faculty members are Rev. Paul Galtes, S. J., for many years head of the department of chemistry at Santa Clara and Gonzaga universities, who will occupy the same position at Loyola; Rev. Cyril Kavanaugh, S.J., recently returned from graduate study at the University of Barcelona, Spain, professor of philosophy; Rev. C. Lynch, S.J., instructor in English, and Rev. Hilary Werts, S.J., instructor in physics. Rev. Robert Shepherd, S.J., recently of Loyola High School, has been chosen to fill the newly created office of dean of men.

The Loyola University college of law in the Byrne Building, will this year offer both day and evening classes in law and related subjects under the direction of a greatly enlarged faculty consisting of prominent members of the bench and bar, assisted b ya staff of resident instructors.

Platt Company Has Anniversary

The Platt Music Company of Los Angeles, celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary, has received hundreds of letters and telegrams of congratulations from prominent manufacturers of musical instruments and radios, from merchants, banks and other financial institutions in all parts of the United States.

Many of these communications were addressed to Benjamin Platt, who established the company in 1905, since which time it has set up branch stores in all parts of Southern California. Mr. Platt, in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary, entertained the entire personnel of his organization at a Silver Jubilee party.

Hotels Install More Radios

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Thirty per cent of the country's hotels have radio installations, a survey shows.

With about 25,000 hotels and apartmenth hotels now in operation, this estimate means that 7500 of them have fitted up their guest rooms either with loud speakers connected to a central receiver or with receiver outlets for antenna and ground connections.

The same estimate, which is based on data gathered by Lewis Winner, New York radio expert, indicates that by the end of the year 12,000 more hotels will have installed radio.

WANT ADS PUT SPICE IN LIFE

Comedy and Tragedy Flit Between Lines

Material for Good Novels Goes Begging Daily

Opportunity Knocks Without Any Large Type

BY JANE FREDERICKSON

If one is looking for real entertainment and thrills in his reading he should reach for the want ads in his favorite daily and not for a novel. Revealed in the pages of the advertising liners are love, tragedy, sadness, happiness, travel, poverty, adventure, business contacts, the entire gamut of human experience.

He will find wives seeking lost spouses, or vice versa, he will read of husbands who declare they will no longer be responsible for the bills of the woman they promised to love and cherish.

OPPORTUNITY KNOCKS

If one wants a home, there are columns telling of alluring places to live that are for sale, or if he wants to dispose of a home, here is the place where its charms may be placed before the buyer. Beloved lost pets are found more largely through the want ads than by any other medium. If one has money to invest, business opportunities fairly hit him in the face. Should he want to sell the family car, or buy a new or used one, here is the place to go to find what is on the market. Chickens, live stock, nursery stock, tractors, seeds, cigars, tobacco, servants, all can be found by glancing at the ads.

DRAMA MATERIAL

With a little imagination one can weave intriguing stories about the three or four-line insertions on these pages. For instance, suppose a nurse has been working here and sending much of her money home to parents. They are getting old and want her to return and have obtained a attractive position for her in her home town. All she needs is the money for transportation. Happening to pick up a Sunday Times want ad section, she reads:

NURSE wanted to travel with family going to Philadelphia. Phone Santa Monica.——

Philadelphia is near her home, so she makes the contact with the advertiser and is soon on her way. Of course, imagination must help the want ad reader in search of interesting items, but it does not take much imagination to figure out the above sequel to the ad.

SOBS AND JOYS

Probably the most joys are found in the "Personal" notices and the most tragedies in the "Legal Notices." In these latter there is not a day in which the general public is not notified of the breaking up of some home by notices pathetically alike and usually reading,

"Will not be responsible for debts contracted by my wife, Mary Jones, after this date, signed John Jones."

Others are even more specific and state, "Susan Green having left my bed and board, I will not be responsible for any bills she may contract after this date. Thomas Green."

Then there are the husbands who are still hoping and are wanting to be as kindly as possible, may be with the hope that Mary or Susie will come back. They do not publish the names of the spouses' last mate.

"I will not be responsible for any bills contracted by any one other than myself after this date. Samuel Brown."

This column is perused with great care by the credit departments of the various stores, for it is seldom that the wife whose husband publishes that he will not pay her bills has the money to make the payments herself.

WHERE MINDS MEET

Often the answer to an advertisement is contained in the same column as the inquiry. For instance, these two which were noticed not long ago in the same issue:

LEAVING soon, Portland, Spokane. Take 3, help drive Buick sedan. Dill. ——

TWO young men will drive for transportation to Spokane or Winnipeg. Reference. — South Maple Ave., Montebello.

Would you have adventure? Here it is:

4000-MILE cruise to Virgin, Fox cific Isles, in powerful yacht. Sept. 1st. Want 8 congenial sportsmen for hunting, fishing, exploration. Beautiful birds, plentiful wild game. Island shores abound in sharks, tuna, whales, porpoise, etc. Acclaimed "botanist paradise" by Academy of Science. Visit points of interest along Mexico shores. Call CIA. —

Are you a philanthropist searching for worthy ones to assist? Then read this:

AMBITIOUS girl wants to borrow $1200 to complete her training. References and security furnished. Address X, box —, Times Office.

Should you have a belated vacation and no car and be longing for a trip, here is your opportunity:

LOOKING for partner for my vacation trip to Yellowstone Park and Montana. Have closed car. Write Box —, CHINO, CAL.

STYLES CHANGE

It is interesting to note how much the "Wanted Situations, Female" have changed in the last ten years. They used to tell us that "strong, capable woman, not afraid of work, seeks employment." Now the majority of those listed in this column designate themselves as "Ladies." Here's one, telling of a "Lady experienced cafe dishwasher."

One only has to read for enjoyment in the advertising section to find just about anything he desires from a chauffeur to the financing of a miniature golf course, and it will be the most interesting reading in the paper.

CHILDREN'S TEETH FAULTY

BERLIN, Sept. 6. (AP)—Of more than 400,000 school children examined at dental clinics here, at least 100,000 needed treatment. At special sittings 41,096 teeth were filled and 34,371 roots treated.

MARRIAGE VOWS LAST

LISBON, Sept. 6. (AP)—Despite separation of church and state, marriage is still considered an almost indissoluble contract and there were only 900 divorces in Portugal in 1929, a record figure nevertheless.

BOWL THEATER PLANS ADVANCE

Board of Governors Named for Playhouse

"Apple Cart" by Shaw Billed for Opening Night

Art School in Connection Now Contemplated

Continuing its program for the permanent establishment of the Civic Repertory Theater, the Bowl Theater Association through Allan C. Balch, president, yesterday announced selection of a board of governors.

O.T. BABCOCK

Naming of a group of twenty-two prominent citizens to control the Repertory Theater activities follows closely the completion last week of a board of directors for the Bowl Theater Association. Activities of this group have been indorsed by the Hollywood Bowl Association.

Many who have been identified with the cultural growth of the community are on the governing board. In addition to the directors with Mr. Balch as president, David T. Babcock, first vice-president; R. J. Schwepipe, second vice-president; Sam H. Meyer, treasurer, and Mrs. Gretchen Hensel Cooper, Mrs. Josephine Everett, E. N. Martin and Lawrence G. McNeil, the governing board includes Mrs. Burdette H. Chapman, Melville Dozier, Jr., Dr. J. Percival Gerson, George Willett Hinton, Sam Kress, A. L. Lathrop, Rev. Willsie Martin, E. C. Mitchell, M. R. Palmer, C. E. Toberman, C. A. Copper, John Shirely Ward, Mrs. Chauncey D. Clark and H. Ellis Reed.

Already plans are under way for the opening of the Repertory Theater season on October 27 in the Music Box Theater, Hollywood. The opening play will be George Bernard Shaw's "The Apple Cart," and other plays of the same high caliber will follow.

The Bowl Theater Association has other plans besides the repertory season. It contemplates building on Hollywood Bowl property a theater to house the civic productions as well as facilities for an academy of the drama and the teaching of painting, dancing, music and allied arts.

The Bowl Theater group in sponsoring and managing the movement will assume no financial obligations, it was stated by the directors. Plans are being made for the establishment of a permanent fund through founder and sustaining memberships.

NIBLO'S SON MARRIED TO MISS HENRY

Hundred Persons Invited to Attend Wedding Taking Place in Beverly Hills

Fred Niblo, Jr., son of the motion-picture director, and his bride, the former Miss Patricia Henry, 19 years of age, went on their honeymoon last night following their marriage yesterday noon at the Church of the Good Shepherd in Beverly Hills. The ceremony was performed by Bishop Cantwell and Father Mullins.

Those invited numbered approximately 100. The bridesmaid was Miss Eugenia Blount, while Fred Niblo, Sr., stood up with his son. Victor Lewis, a friend of the family, gave Miss Henry in marriage. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Anna Kerney Henry. She is not connected with pictures.

Last night the couple left for their honeymoon trip through the Grand Canyon and to the East. The bridegroom, 27, is a writer at the Columbia Studios. The marriage culminates a romance of about a year.

ACTOR THANKFUL FOR SAVING OF HIS CABIN

Shaded lawns, a Spanish house with a blue gate, small green tables made bright by stainless shelves of spotless linen, long rows of white cots—this is the Assistance League Day Nursery, one of the 134 agencies of the Community Chest, which daily cares for forty-five boys and girls.

Answering the special needs of children whose mothers are at work all day, the organization has been operating since 1925, when it was founded by a number of women. From 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. the Day Nursery takes entire charge of the children and gives them the care which they cannot receive at home.

Children are divided into two groups which have distinct schedules of work and play.

The 1929 allocation of the Community Chest to the agency was $6032.80. A larger budget will be necessary this year.

STRIKERS' NUMBERS INCREASE

Additional Workers Walk Out in Twelve Cloak and Suit Establishments

While the third day of the strike in the women's cloak-and-suit industry passed yesterday without union leaders being able to accomplish the shutdown of any additional shops, individual workers walked out in twelve more plants, bringing the total which have been affected by the strike to date to thirty-six and the number of workers who have quit their jobs to more than 700.

The strike call to date, as revealed by requests to the police for protection of plants, has been directed at forty of the sixty-three cloak-and-suit plants in the city, but at four of them not a single worker has heeded the summons of the union leaders.

Of the thirty-six which have been affected, in only thirteen of them have all the workers struck, while only a small percentage, in some cases less than half, have walked out at the remaining twenty-three. Meanwhile, the employers, including those whose shops have been forced to shut down completely, are remaining firm in their determination not to give in to the union demand for recognition.

The reason in which the majority of the shops are located was orderly yesterday, it was said by Detective Lieutenant Hynes, head of the police Red squad, but he said several workers had reported to him that they had been threatened by anonymous persons and he furnished police escorts to take these workers to their homes.

Jury Decides Woman's Fatal Fall Accident

Sobbing on the witness stand Frederick Belt yesterday told a Coroner's jury how Margaret Garnet Pittman, 22 years of age, was fatally injured when she fell from the fourth story of a downtown hotel last Wednesday night while he vainly sought to break in a locked door.

The jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

Testimony revealed that Belt and Mrs. Pittman were living in a hotel at 1401 South Hill street. Belt testified that, returning to the room after a short absence, he found the door locked and Mrs. Pittman partly out of the window. Before he could get in she had climbed out of the window and, after clinging by her hands for nearly five minutes and crying for help, she fell to the alley below. She died later at the Receiving Hospital.

Belt said the two were out of employment and that they had been discussing this prior to his departure, the discussion verging on a quarrel, in which Mrs. Pittman threatened not to see him again.

KNOTS IN BENCH WILL BE PLANED

Superior Court Judges to Meet in Convention

Topics for Discussion to Include Procedure

Jurists to Aid in Setting Law Entrance Rules

The practice of law by banks, title and trust companies, and discussions of adjusters and collection agencies were yesterday announced as topics which will be under debate during the first annual convention of the Superior Court Judges' Association which will be held at the Hotel Huntington, Pasadena, from the 17th to 20th inst. Officials of the State bar of California yesterday said there will a general adjournment of the courts throughout California for the three-day session when an estimated attendance of 1000 lawyers and judges is expected.

The convention will consider numerous procedural changes in court conduct which will be submitted by various sections of the State bar and a proposed amendment to the State Bar Act setting up educational standards for admission to the bar will be acted upon, officials said.

Addresses by Dr. Roscoe Pound, dean of Harvard University school of law; Chief Justice Waste of the California Supreme Court, Thomas C. Ridgeway and Dr. William B. Munro of the California Institute of Technology have been scheduled.

A luncheon meeting of the City Prosecutors' Association of California will be held in the Crystal Room of the hotel on the 19th inst. and the sessions of the convention will close with a banquet on Saturday evening. Charles A. Beardsley, president of the State bar, will preside. Dr. William B. Munro and George Breslin will be included in the list of speakers.

Hedge-Hopper's Sentence in Air

Harold Wayne Merrill, 19 years of age, 203 Santa Anita Court, Sierra Madre, yesterday was under a suspended sentence of sixty days in jail for flying at a low altitude in violation of the State law, according to a Sheriff's office report.

Merrill, according to Capt. Morgan of the aviation detail, pleaded guilty of diving his plane low over his home before Justice of the Peace Lassiter of Sierra Madre.

KISSING WIFE DIVORCED

Hugs and kisses of other men for his wife caused great anguish to George R. Kettle, he complained yesterday in getting a divorce from Freda May Kettle. Kettle asserted that, against his protests, his wife conducted herself familiarly with other men, letting them hug and kiss her. Also, she would not cook or keep house for him, he complained, adding that she circulated false stories about him. Superior Judge Archbald granted him a divorce.

SAN DIEGO ARMY AND NAVY ACADEMY

PACIFIC BEACH, CALIFORNIA

Special Notice — The enrollment of the San Diego Army and Navy Academy, with eleven more days to go, is already in excess of the number in attendance on the opening day of last session. In view of this continued interest and appreciation on the part of parents, Col. Thomas A. Davis, Pres., or Capt. T. H. Messer, executive aide, will hold office hours each day until the opening day, Sept. 15th, at the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles, and will be pleased to give information regarding this great school.

THE SAN DIEGO ARMY AND NAVY ACADEMY has received international recognition because of the excellence of its academic instruction, the thoroughness of its military training and attendant discipline and, above all else, of the real heart interest taken in the young men and boys entrusted to its care.

It is one of two schools in California having the War Department Class "M" rating—"essentially military." It is a Junior Unit R. O. T. C. It enjoys active membership in the Association of Military Colleges and Schools of the United States. It emphasizes Christian character training. From a beginning of 13 students in 1910 it grew last session to an aggregate enrollment of 450 cadets from many States and several foreign countries. Character references are demanded of all applicants for admission. Rates will cover practically all school expenses, except uniforms and incidental school supplies.

The Nationally Famous "Big School for Little Boys"

Some of the reasons for this school's national leadership and unexampled success follow:

HIGH CLASS OF THE PUPILS. Intelligence quotient of boys in 6th, 7th, and 8th grades last year was 116; in 1st to 5th grades it was 125. For the U. S. A. as a whole it is 100.

EXCELLENT SCHOOL WORK. The Stanford university achievement tests are our standard. Any high school in America will take our graduates into its 9th grade on recommendation of the headmaster.

PHYSICAL TRAINING. This is kept on a par with the mental training and is deemed as important. Little Boys need an entirely different kind of training than high school boys receive. They will rarely enter games unless required to do so, and for this reason are often neglected in the ordinary type of school.

ATHLETIC EQUIPMENT. Wonderful gymnasium, eight acres of playgrounds, fully tiled swimming pool, cement tennis courts, and every possible facility for adequate training.

MILITARY DRILL. As there are no high school boys to take the offices, these are filled by Little Boys. Knowledge that he does not have to drill as a private until he reaches high school stimulates the little boy to high endeavor instead of taking all ambition out of him.

FACULTY. There are thirty teachers on the staff for our 250 pupils and we have tried consistently for many years to develop the best teaching corps for small boys in America. Our classes are small.

GENERAL CONDITIONS. The boys are healthy and happy. They live in fireproof buildings; a night watchman sees every boy every hour. Supervision is continuous. Matrons give needed attention. A resident physician is available. Day pupils leave at 5 P.M.

MENTAL TESTS. A psychometrist has resided at the school for the past six years, so that we know the material we are working with. We probably have the most complete collection of data in our particular form of test to be found in America.

RECOGNITION. In a great national survey of private schools Page was placed second in the grammar school class to only one school in Massachusetts. As that school has no military drill Page leads all military schools for little boys in the whole United States.

TRAINING. After all is said and done it is the training that counts. The buildings and equipment remain at the school when a boy leaves, but he takes his training with him.

FALL TERM. School opens September 22nd. It looks now like a full enrollment. Come out and see us. We shall be here every day and will gladly show you around. For catalog address—

SIGN LANGUAGE INVOKED TO BALK STUDIO NOISES

Broadcast Staffs Being Trained to Prevent Sending on Air of Unscheduled Sounds

World-Wide News at 10 p.m.

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Broadcasting studios have been attempting valiantly to prevent the ever-increasing sensitivity of the microphone sending out on the air the faintest sound made in the broadcasting studio. Particularly for those who must give and receive orders necessary for the conduct of the program without letting the radio audience behind the scenes, is this problem a perplexing one.

Probably every radio-set owner at one time or another has picked up something which was not intended for his ears. Situations embarrassing to stations have occurred from time to time, when something not on the program inadvertently was broadcast.

To prevent occurrences such as this, as well as to expedite the handling of the program and the changes of microphones which must be made, some of the stations are adopting the sign language, something in the same manner as a baseball catcher signals to his pitcher.

An elaborate set of signals is being worked out in the main studios of the Columbia broadcasting system in New York, where they have been found not only to reduce the delays in making changes, but also to eliminate the occasional noises made as members of the staff tiptoe from one point to another to give and receive instructions.

Control of the program is vested in the production man, who has his station in a glass-cased soundproof booth. From this he gives the announcer and musicians their instructions. When the music diminishes in volume gradually, preparatory to a station break or announcement, its timeliness is not due entirely to perfection attained by rehearsal, for nothing is left to chance, but a wordless signal has been given the musicians by production men. Other signals indicate whether the fade-out is to be fast or slow, if the current is to be turned off or a microphone moved, or whatever else is necessary for the smooth and silent conduct of the program.

MANY MEN NEEDED

This is but another angle of the science of radio broadcasting which has turned the one-time simple machinery of a broadcasting station into a complexity of specialists. Many of the larger stations maintain men whose sole efforts are devoted to the production of sound effects, such as storms, animal calls, etc. Others allot their time to orchestrations, compositions, musical continuities and the like.

Where yesterday studio staffs were confined to two or three—today, that number is tripled and quadrupled. The commercial department alone, where is confined the efforts to obtain sponsors, has become an intricate, highly systematized production center. And tomorrow, with the advent of television and advances undreamed of as yet, a radio broadcasting studio will resemble the most mature of today's leading industries.

A considerable percentage of the loitering-in public object to the formality and stiffness that is being injected into program presentation. Those listeners-in crave the human touch and rather desire natural incidents which may happen in a studio. Even continuity programs are developing into a showman's game pure and simple. The extemporaneous speaker is still more popular than the copy-reader.

THEY TELLS US THAT—

One of the most delightful sacred concerts is the Cathedral Hour, KHJ, at 12:30 o'clock. If you like sacred music and well-rendered song try it this Sabbath.

KFWB at 1:20 takes you to Wrigley Field for the double-header ball game. And it's an appetizer for the early Sunday supper.

Sunday evening in the average home finds the tots in bed with mother and dad doing a bit of reading. Calmon Luboviski in violin recital at 9 over KNX is a perfect relaxation.

The "sweetest songbird of all" to many music lovers, Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink over KFI at 4 this afternoon. Like wine, her songs mellow and sweeten as the years sweep along.

Go to the Westlake Park concert with your dial at 2 over KNX. The kids won't fall into the lake while you listen to the two-hour program.

Catholics should dial NBC's Catholic Hour at 2 over KECA. Rev. Dr. Charles L. O'Donnell inaugurates a series of talks on Catholic education. He is the president of Notre Dame. The Mediaevalists, a mixed octet, will present a repertoire of religious music.

"A city-wide appeal from the children of Los Angeles," asserts KTM, induced it to present the Ranch Hour every night with the exception of Wednesdays, between 6 and 9 p.m. So Little Willie and Susie get a break.

KTM's sacred concert at 3:30 reads like a most pleasant half-hour for meditation.

Back Home Hour from Buffalo over KHJ at 7 p.m. A neat program with no radio huckstering—the kind to loll back in the morris chair and scold Willie if he twists the kitty's tail while you're listening.

The thousands who visited the eighth annual Radio Show are twisting the dial today with a great deal more personal interest. They have seen the folks that please them.

Blue Monday Jamboree tomorrow night over KHJ and we hope to pull a lot more programs out of the hat for you.

Rabbi Edgar Magnin at 4:30 over KHJ. Always an interesting speaker with no attempt to proselyte. He is welcomed home from a European vacation.

OHIO MEETING TUESDAY

Members of the Ohio Society of Southern California will meet Tuesday night in Moose Hall, 1024 South Grand avenue. There will be entertainment.

Wife Declares She Was Wed at 12 Years of Age

Madelin Vega, 22 years of age, who says she was married when only 12, yesterday appeared before Superior Judge Hanby and had her marriage with Patrick Thomas Vega annulled.

The young wife from the witness stand told a strange story. She declared she did not know who her parents were, or where she was born. She said she was reared by a Mr. and Mrs. Luna.

"I stayed with this Mexican family. They told me I was given to them when I was a baby," she said.

The wife said that she was married on May 17, 1920, and separated from her husband on May 11, 1926. Two children were born as a result of the union, Ruby, now 8, and Patrick, 6.

Mrs. Vega's story was corroborated by Joe Luna, 15. He said he was known as her half-brother, but actually was no relative. He also declared he had been given to the Luna family when a baby and was brought up by them.

WIFE SUES CRITIC

The marital bonds between H. Frank Bolas and his wife, Mrs. Delpha Long Bolas, were broken when he criticised her grammar, according to her complaint for a divorce filed yesterday in the Superior Court.

Many of the projects are [illegible] under way, others in the for[illegible] native stage and others in the [illegible], not all mentioned in the [illegible] accompanying this article [illegible] appearing elsewhere in this [illegible]

REASON FOR WORK

Regarding the improvement work [illegible] Brent R. Mansur, assistant city [illegible] engineer, declared: "It is [illegible] sary for the growth and wel[illegible] of the city to have a system [illegible] thoroughfares of such width and [illegible] arrangement as will facilitate direct [illegible] and uninterrupted movement of [illegible] traffic between the central business [illegible] district and all other sections of [illegible] the city as well as between the [illegible] several subcenters. Los Angeles [illegible] was not laid out with this scientific [illegible] arrangement of streets because the [illegible] present rise of the city and the [illegible] enormous volume of vehicular [illegible] traffic were not anticipated. It is, [illegible] therefore, necessary to eliminate [illegible] the obstructions to circulation by [illegible] opening, widening and improvement [illegible] of new traffic arteries."

Among the most notable of the [illegible] improvements which are now under [illegible] way are the "Five-Finger Plan" in [illegible] Hollywood, Washington Boulevard [illegible] opening and opening, the Eighth [illegible] street project and the Fremont [illegible] Place widening.

Already $4,000,000, not included in [illegible] above totals, has been spent in [illegible] acquiring land for the Hollywood [illegible] project, which includes the widening [illegible] and opening of Ivar, Wilcox, Yucca, [illegible] Gower and Cahuenga avenues. A [illegible] survey of the Hollywood work con[illegible] ducted by Gilbert Bressmeyer, sec[illegible] retary of the Guarantee Building [illegible] and Loan Association, discloses that [illegible] the projects of a total length of 20,500 [illegible] feet will be paved and 44,128 lineal [illegible] feet of sewer pipe and connections [illegible] with 12,743 feet of storm drains will [illegible] be installed. The Sunset Boule[illegible] vard job involves 20,432 feet of pav[illegible] ing, 38,120 lineal feet of sewer pipe [illegible] and connections and 3821 feet of [illegible] storm drains, according to the sur[illegible] veyors. This work from Normandie [illegible] to Barrenhurst involves an expendi[illegible] ture of $800,000. The Virgil avenue [illegible] and Laurel Canyon projects in [illegible] Hollywood will cost $300,000 and [illegible] $100,000, respectively.

EIGHTH STREET SPEEDED

[illegible] improvement of Eighth street be[illegible] tween Figueroa and Windsor Boule[illegible] vard is now being rushed and will [illegible] be completed by about January 1. [illegible] The street was closed to traffic [illegible] in August and work was be[illegible] gun by the Griffith Company under [illegible] contract which it was awarded on [illegible] a bid of $371,895. Deliveries on a [illegible] contract calling for 70,000 tons [illegible] of rock and sand to be used in road [illegible] work were begun last week by the [illegible] Consolidated Rock Products Com[illegible] pany.

[illegible] Additional work on the widening of [illegible] Eighth street to 100 feet be[illegible] tween Figueroa and Alameda street [illegible] is to start within thirty days [illegible] after the completion of the project [illegible] now awarded for within 120 days [illegible] after the start of the contract, it [illegible] was reported last week by Clarence [illegible] Dillon, president of the Washington [illegible] Boulevard Association. Washington [illegible] street is now 100 feet in [illegible] width from Figueroa street to Ven[illegible] ice, and is one of the most impor[illegible] tant cross-town arteries.

CITY EMBARKS ON GREAT STREET PROGRAM

EXPENDITURE TO EXCEED $100,000,000 TOTAL

Two-Year Improvement Schedule Involves Downtown Arteries and Outlying Streets

BY JAMES L. DAVIS,
Real Estate Editor

Los Angeles today is embarked on the greatest street widening and improvement program in its history; one which will prepare the city for great future population growth and which will provide employment for thousands of the city's workers both in the actual construction work and in the preparation of materials. This street program includes:

Opening and widening work approved by the City Council is scheduled to get under way during the next two years on streets for which cost of the land acquisition alone is estimated at $67,830,455.32, while grading, paving and other improvement work during this period only a portion of which has been estimated by City Engineer Lloyd's department, will cost $21,779,512.

Street grading, paving and other improvement work either under way at the present time or on which construction work will start almost immediately, is estimated to cost $9,363,156.

These street-improvement costs for the next two years will far exceed $89,559,967.32, as partial estimates now available total $89,559,967.32.

Every section of Los Angeles is affected in the improvement program to be accomplished, the projects ranging from main business arteries in the downtown area to residential streets in the outlying districts. Many of the projects are of the through way, others in the form of bridge and others in the form of subways, all mentioned in the opening paragraphs of this article and all appearing elsewhere in this issue.

PLANS FOR WORK

Supervising the improvement work for the city is Lloyd M. Mansur, assistant city engineer, declared: "It is essential for the growth and welfare of the city to have a system of boulevards of such width and capacity as will facilitate direct and uninterrupted movement of traffic between the central business district and all other sections of the city as well as between the various communities. Los Angeles is not alone with this scientific development of streets because the growth of the city and the increasing volume of vehicular traffic have anticipated. It is, however, necessary to eliminate bottlenecks to circulation by widening and improvement of the traffic arteries."

Most important and most notable of the improvements which are now under way are the "Five-Finger Plan" in Hollywood, Washington Boulevard widening and opening, the Eighth Street viaduct and the Sunset Boulevard project, not included in the $89,559,967.32, has been spent in Hollywood for the Hollywood Boulevard project includes the widening and extension of Ivar, Wilcox, Yucca, Cahuenga avenues. A part of the Hollywood work consists of Gilbert Beesemeyer, secretary of the Guarantee Building and Loan Association, discloses that the work, a total length of 20,980 feet will be paved and 44,128 lineal feet of sewer pipe and connections and 3821 feet of storm drains will be installed. The Sunset Boulevard project involves 20,632 feet of pavement, 44,128 lineal feet of sewer pipe and connections and 3821 feet of storm drains, according to the surveyors' data. This work from Normandie avenue to Alvarado involves an expenditure of $600,000. The Virgil avenue and Silver Lake Canyon projects in Hollywood will cost $300,000 and $200,000 respectively.

FIRST STREET SPEEDED

The widening of First street between Boyle avenue and Windsor Boulevard is now being rushed and will be completed by about January 1. First street was closed to traffic on August 1 and work was begun by the Griffith Company under contract which it was awarded on a bid of $971,595. Deliveries on a contract calling for 70,000 tons of crushed rock and sand to be used in road construction began last week by the Consolidated Rock Products Company.

The work on the widening of Alameda street to 100 feet between First street to 100 feet between Temple street and Alameda street was started within thirty days after completion of the project and is required for within 120 days after the start of the contract, it was announced last week by Clarence Ridgeway, president of the Washington-Alameda Association. Washington street is now 100 feet in width from Figueroa street to Venice, one of the most important cross-town arteries.

Approximately $300,000 will be ex-

FACT AND COMMENT

Study of the report of J. J. Backus, city superintendent of building, shows the extent of work being done in this department of the municipal government, which keeps safeguard not only upon the safety of citizens but upon their health as well.

The report enumerates the inspections made, analyzes building permits issued and offers many interesting sidelights on the activity of builders and the growth of Los Angeles.

One recommendation in the report brings to light a condition existing here which should have been remedied voluntarily and without the necessary enforcement legislation which the report requests. That recommendation is one demanding that hospitals keep films used in laboratory work in fireproof vaults or else use noninflammable films.

The disaster resulting from exploding films in a hospital in Cleveland carving the death of more than 100 persons, is no so far in the past as to be forgotten by many who enter the hospitals here each year. Yet in but six of the twenty-three hospitals in this city are X-ray films kept in fireproof vaults. The recommendation for legislation on this point appears to be timely. Los Angeles does not want a repetition of the Cleveland disaster.

Superintendent Backus and his aides are to be complimented on the accomplishments of the department as disclosed in the annual report. Los Angeles is known throughout America as having one of the finest building codes in the nation and strict enforcement of that code deserves commendation.

Investment Trusts

What will be the effect upon Los Angeles real estate when the dozen or more real estate investment trusts begin their dissolution?

This question has been in the minds of many realty brokers here during the past few years and has been accentuated with each announcement of the formation of additional trusts of this nature. The majority of these trusts provide for a dissolution date when all holdings of the company are to be converted into cash.

Unfortunately this dissolution date in a number of instances falls within the same year or years. Should these trusts be successful in their endeavors and when the time comes for them to dissolve, own some $100,000,000 or more of Los Angeles property, what will be the effect on general realty conditions when all this property is dumped upon the market for cash sale?

Officers of the State of California having in charge the granting of permits for these trusts should take this question into consideration and devise some method whereby all property in a trust is not placed on the market at once. Such action would be beneficial not

Taxation Committee Chairman Declares Organized Effort Essential to Relief Program

That the time has been reached when it is proper that property owners with realty operators in carrying to conclusion their program of relief in the application of the tax burden, limitation of taxes on property and rigid economy in public expenditures is the contention of Gordon P. Jones, chairman of the taxation committee of the California Real Estate Association, who has been making an intensive study of the question.

"The public mind has been educated," he said. "The fact that property is carrying an unfair burden in the cost of government is now accepted and acknowledged and there seems to be a willingness on the part of everybody concerned to serve to some program that will prove a relief to overburdened property.

"The program is going to call for some action in the next session of the legislature, a great deal of law will have to be changed. A great many items of the government will have to be readjusted. A strong campaign with a large membership as a background

HOLLYWOOD PROJECT TO BE ERECTED

Thirteen-Story Structure to Rise Within Two Months on Boulevard

Hollywood's latest projected apartment-house will rise within two months on Sunset Boulevard near King's Road, the property on ending back to De Longpre avenue, and will cost approximately $500,000 in building and furnishings, according to Leland Bryant, architect, who is now preparing plans for William I. Moffett, owner. The building will rise thirteen stories, modern type, steel frame with various features, including use of vitrolite, glass, chromium plated steel windows, cut stone exterior, electrically ventilated kitchens and dishwashing sinks are some of the features of the structure.

A garage for the 150 cars will front De Longpre avenue with a covered passage by leading to the apartment entrance. Apartments will contain one, two three and four rooms and all living rooms are designed as to be corner rooms.

At the top is pictured work under way on Cahuenga avenue, which is to become a high-capacity traffic artery under the "five finger" improvement. To the left is reproduced a picture taken near Figueroa street, showing progress being made on the widening and improvement of Eighth street from Figueroa west to Windsor Boulevard. To the right Ivar street is pictured, as it is being converted into a major boulevard and extended south from Hollywood Boulevard as part of the "five finger" plan. Many trees which lined this street have been cut down. The bottom view shows the widening of Sunset Boulevard from Vine street west.

SERIES OF ARTICLES ON DECORATION ANNOUNCED

A series of articles intended to aid home owners in the decoration of their dwellings will appear in this section of The Times beginning next Sunday.

The articles will be written by Mildred Mellow Bateson, M.A., professor of interior decoration, school of architecture, University of Southern California. Miss Bateson has had international training and experience with both eastern and western sections of the United States contributing also to her experience.

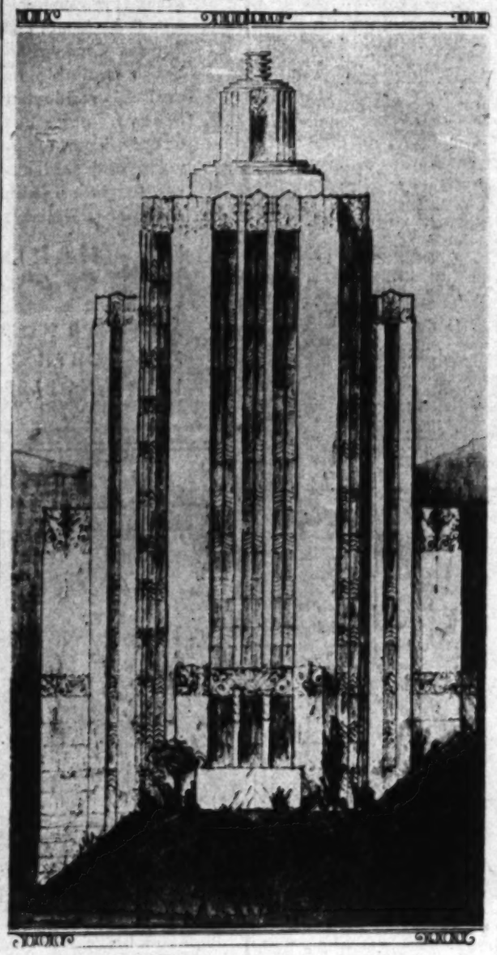
The series will deal with all phases of home decoration, discussing both in a general way and in detail the decoration of various rooms in the home and the use of appropriate colors. The articles are intended to aid both the builders of new homes and those contemplating changes in interiors.

After attending the University of Washington at Seattle for two years, Miss Bateson went to Chicago, where she received her Ph.B. (1924) and M.A. (1925) degrees. From 1926 to 1929 she was instructor in history of art and archeology at Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., at the same time observing and studying the art and architectural trends of the Atlantic coast.

Six months' study abroad, in Italy, France, England, Austria and Germany, included work with Lorado Taft, sculptor, and a visit to the International Art Pilgrimage at Prague.

In 1929 Miss Bateson came to the Pacific Coast and became a member of the faculty of the school of architecture of the University of Southern California. She has done advisory work with the motion-picture studios with regard to correct and authentic interior sets, as well as period furniture and costume.

Limit-Height Apartment Designed



Garage Space Provided

Above is shown a thirteen-story, Class A apartment building designed by Leland Bryant for William I. Moffett, and to be located on the south side of Sunset Boulevard, near King's Road, and extending back to DeLongpre avenue. The structure comprises 168 rooms divided into sixty-four apartments, each with three exposures and to be furnished to individual demands. Garage space will accommodate 150 cars. Building and furnishings are to cost approximately $500,000.

Twenty-four Totals Greater for Year to Date

Los Angeles and Long Beach Lead Larger Areas

Thirty-one Southern California cities during the month of August showed increases in building permit valuations as compared to permits issued during August of 1929, Los Angeles leading the list with a gain of $962,805. Twenty-four cities in this area have greater building valuation totals for this year to the 1st inst. than for the first eight months of last year.

GAIN RECORDED

Los Angeles permits for August totaled $6,494,577 compared to $5,511,772 for the same period last year. San Francisco, second largest city on the Pacific Coast, reported permit valuations last month of $1,342,128 compared to $3,096,633 in August of 1929. Long Beach was the only other large city on the Coast to show an increase in permit valuations for last August as compared to one year ago. A tabulation of permits issued in eighty-one Southern California cities and in larger cities to the north appears elsewhere in this issue.

Dwelling construction in this city reached a valuation of $1,594,318 for the month with $680,100 being spent for apartment-houses. This construction provided for a total of 811 families, according to the monthly report of J. J. Backus, city superintendent of building.

In addition to Los Angeles, cities showing larger permit valuations last August than for the same month one year ago are Long Beach, San Bernardino, Santa Barbara, Glendale, Santa Ana, Riverside, San Marino, North Hollywood, Santa Monica, Pomona, Inglewood, Santa Maria, San Gabriel, Venice, Newport Beach, San Luis Obispo, El Centro, Anaheim, Manhattan Beach, Redondo Beach, Calexico, Maywood, Monrovia, Brawley, Corona, Tulare, Hawthorne, El Segundo, Huntington Beach and Harbor City.

CITY INCREASES

Cities showing a greater total for this year to date in permit valuations that for the same period last year are Pasadena, Santa Ana, Riverside, North Hollywood, Bakersfield, Pomona, San Pedro, Inglewood, Redlands, Newport Beach, San Luis Obispo, El Centro, Anaheim, Manhattan Beach, Redondo Beach, Ontario, Calexico, Laguna Beach, Monterey Park, Brawley, Corona, Hermosa Beach, Sierra Madre and Seal Beach.

EXCHANGE PLAN TO BE DISCUSSED

Brokers Invited to Attend Session for Consideration of Securities Project

Prominent realty brokers of Los Angeles will meet Wednesday for a discussion as to the advisability of forming a Los Angeles Realty Securities Exchange, according to Attorney W. L. Pollard, who has been in charge of endeavors to organize such a body here.

"It is the plan to form the exchange along the lines of the realty exchange now operating in New York," Pollard said. "A number of the most interested brokers have been invited to attend the session and we plan to discuss fully all phases of the contemplated project."

Brokers invited to the session include W. Ross Campbell, G. D. Robertson, N. J. Cordary, John Blair, Frank Strong, Howard Lattimer, Harold Janss and many others.

Realty Board's Listing Method Found Success

More than twenty parcels of property have been sold through the exchange meetings of the Beverly Hills Realty Board, started less than six months ago, William L. Collier, board president, reported yesterday. The exchange method, which has been successful since its inception, brings to buyer, seller and broker, benefits which they would not otherwise have enjoyed, Collier stated. Greater returns are predicted during the coming six months. The exchange meetings are under the direction of George Elkins, a vice-president.

Site Purchased by Corporation for Apartment

The property at 669-71 South Bonnie Brae, 150 feet south of Wilshire Boulevard, has been sold by Jim Hool, business property broker, to a local corporation for a consideration of $40,000.

The property has a frontage of 50 feet and is 150 feet deep. Plans are now being prepared by Architect F. Seward for a $180,000 six-story Class A apartment building, with a garage in the basement, construction to start immediately upon completion of the plans.

Conference to be Conducted at Long Beach

The ninth annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Building Officials' Conference will be held at Long Beach the 29th inst. to October 4, inclusive. Program and entertainment features announced by H. E. Plummer, president of the conference and chief inspector of buildings, Portland, Or., point to a gathering of interest and practicality. Convention headquarters are at the Virginia Hotel. General sessions and committee meetings are open to anyone desiring to attend.

REPORT GIVES BUILDING DATA

Work of City Department for Year Told

Outstanding Features for Period Cited

Inspectors' Auto Mileage Totals 1,568,236

J. J. BACKUS.

Interesting facts regarding the enormity of the work done during the past twelve months by the City Building Department is contained in the annual report of J. J. Backus, superintendent, covering the year ending June 30, last, and just made public.

This department has in charge the welfare of Los Angeles citizens, inspections governing the health as well as safety of residents of the city. Some of the interesting items in the report follow:

Plumbing, building and electrical inspectors during the year made a total of 547,236 inspections, traveling 1,568,236 miles by automobile.

October, 1929, was the biggest building month of the year in point of number of permits, January being the largest month in point of valuation of permits. During July more accommodations for families were built in the city than any other month.

INSPECTION RECORD

Residence buildings of all classes during the year were 44.1 per cent of the total permits issued, providing accommodations for 41,354 persons.

The building department checked 7715 plans and total re-checks amounted to 10,002. In 1922-1923, the city's greatest building year, 8639 plans were checked, a difference of but 625, although the valuation of permits then were almost double those of last year.

Permits for ten buildings of twelve stories or more in height were granted during the year.

Modernization of homes and business buildings, classified in the department's records as alterations, took a decided jump during the year, increasing 33 per cent above the figures for the previous twelve-month period.

TRAFFIC WORK

Traffic signals were maintained by the department at a cost of $16 each per month for sixteen hours a day, replacing two police officers, with the resultant financial saving.

The Southern California Edison Company took out the largest permit for the year, one of $3,852,000 for its new building. The addition to the Southern California Telephone Company building, with permit for $1,563,000, was second and the Automobile Club of Southern California for $900,000 was the third largest of the year.

BUILDING PERMITS TOTALED

Forty-three Residences Planned for Development During August

West Los Angeles official records disclose that forty-three permits were issued for new residence construction in Westwood Hills during the month of August, according to Harold Janss, vice-president of the Janss Investment Corporation.

In contrast to this record, a recent survey shows that in 1869, during a so-called boom, there were only thirty-six homes under construction at one time in the entire incorporated area of Los Angeles as it then existed, Janss states.

In the recently completed exhibit of homes, known as the "Streets of Old Monterey," but two of the original group of homes remain unsold and the exhibit will not be closed until the 16th inst., it is announced.

The average value of completed homes north of Wilshire Boulevard, in Westwood Hills, is approximately $25,000, while those lying south of Wilshire Boulevard and north of Santa Monica Boulevard average in value about $12,000. South of Santa Monica, where more than 2000 homes have been constructed, the valuations run from $5300 to $10,500, Janss declares.

ACTIVE FALL PROSPECTS ENCOURAGE

Executive Cites Forty-four Single-Family Dwellings Under Way or to Start

Prospects for an active fall season in construction work are reported by R. E. Werminghaus, president of the Tri-Guaranty Building Company, in a statement made yesterday showing forty-four single-family dwellings under erection or ready to start, valued at $157,000. Of these, eleven are in the harbor district, nine in the west city area, and the remainder in scattered locations.

Contracts acquired by this company during the past ten days, it was stated, cover a $10,000 residence to be erected in Beverly Hills for Marcel Silver; $7500 residence to be built in Pasadena for R. B. Chamberlain; four small homes totaling $7200, and a brick service station and garage to be erected in Burbank for Earl K. Lauden to cost $8000.

"It is generally conceded," Werminghaus said, "that the next three months will prove to be the most active building period of the year. Inquiries from property owners over the county are increasing. Architects are doing more preliminary work now than last spring."

CITY LAUNCHES IMPROVEMENTS

pended by the city for the forthcoming widening work, according to data obtained by UNION from the Board of Public Works. This amount will be spent for new curbing and for paving the twenty-foot strip added to the north side of the thoroughfare by the condemnation proceedings. These proceedings resulted in the payment of $1,542,607 to 130 property owners, many of whom spent considerable sums in remodeling the fronts of their buildings and modernizing facilities.

Another Washington street improvement project that is expected to be started within the next six months is the opening and paving of the artery eastward from Alameda street to connect with Twenty-third street at Santa Fe avenue, according to Urban. The city already has purchased for $175,000 a 90-foot right of way extending for more than half a mile and soon will acquire three remaining small parcels of land in preparation for the start of work. It is believed that a long trestle will be necessary in extending Washington street through this section, as a quarry pit of considerable extent covers most of the area. Cost of this work has not been estimated as yet, but it is expected that it will amount to more than $500,000.

TABLE SHOWS SCHEDULED IMPROVEMENT PROJECTS

Below is a list of street opening and widening projects ordered by the City Council of Los Angeles and which are likely to be under way within the next two years. One column of figures gives the cost of acquiring the land. The second column of figures gives the cost of the street improvements as estimated as closely as possible by the City Engineer's office. Cases where no street improvement work cost is given signifies that sufficient progress has not been made for the department to prepare estimates. The last forty-two projects on the list are those on which actual construction of the improvement is expected to begin soon. In most of these cases the projects have passed the opening and widening stage.

In explanation of the table presented above, the data for which was supplied by City Engineer Jessop's department, as regards the Second-street, Figueroa-to-Glendale project, the paving portion of the work is being conducted concurrently with the condemnation. The work is to be started soon, the ordinance of intention for paving to be adopted in a short time. An approximate figure is given for the Tenth-street paving work. In the Allesandro-street, Los Angeles-River-to-Glendale-Boulevard project, the City Council has instructed the engineering department to prepare plans for partial improvement on the existing dedication and work is to be started soon. The Dayton-avenue-Figueroa, Pasadena-avenue-to-Second-street job includes as a part of the work the construction of three tunnels in Elysian Park and the paving of the connection between Dayton bridge and North Broadway at Solano street. This work is now under contract. The Florence-avenue project, from Van Ness to the west city boundary should be under construction in the near future as condemnation proceedings are about completed. The same is true of the Flower-street, Washington-to-Figueroa job. The above table does not include valuations of land to be condemned for projects that have already passed through the engineering department nor does it include many other projects that have not been sufficiently advanced as to have been ordered by the City Council. Practically all money to pay for the improvements listed above will be derived from assessments levied against the property benefited and not from the general tax fund. In cases of opening and widening projects, property owners affected are paid damages for property taken and then assessed for benefits received.

CITY'S BUILDING RANK DISCLOSED

Fourteen Leading Population Centers Given Study

Los Angeles Fourth in Total Nine-Year Construction

Third Place Won in Two of Classifications Listed

CECIL B. BARKER

Los Angeles' high standing among the nation's largest cities in the construction of every class of building was disclosed yesterday with the completion of a study by Cecil B. Barker, general manager of C. C. C. Tatum Realtors, covering building permit records of the fourteen largest cities in the country for the nine-year period, 1921-1929.

The study, made from statistics gathered by the bureau of labor statistics of the Department of Commerce, reveals that Los Angeles ranked fourth among the cities of 500,000 population or more in total construction work in the nine years. The records showed also that this city took third place in the construction of amusement buildings; third in additions, alterations and repairs; fourth in residential construction; fourth in the erection of public buildings, and fifth in the construction of commercial buildings, schools, libraries and churches.

According to the figures obtained by Barker, the fourteen cities of 500,000 population or more reported a total of $16,930,300,968 in new construction and repairs for the nine - year period. The rank of the various cities in total construction follows:

New York City	$7,513,240,782
Chicago	1,811,845,795
Detroit	1,181,644,400
LOS ANGELES	1,047,077,988
Philadelphia	1,047,077,988

With a gain of nearly $1,000,000 in real estate financing in Los Angeles last week, and an increase in the volume of both real estate transfers and of financing instruments, the upward trend in realty activity has been established unusually early for the vacation season, according to an analysis of real estate filings made by the Fidelity Savings and Loan Association.

During the week just closed, there were 862 transfers of property in the fifteen districts into which the city as a whole is divided, and 672 trust deeds and mortgages involved the sum of $3,702,673. As compared with the preceding week when 683 financing instruments were filed and the sum of $3,737,969 involved in such operations, an increase of nineteen instruments and of $964,709 in valuation was recorded.

Several districts made outstanding gains in transfers of property as indicated by the number of deeds filed. The southwest section, crowded out of first place last week by the Wilshire district, again took the lead as the most active real estate center in the city.

In the southwest district, 149 deeds were filed, showing a gain of thirty-eight compared to the preceding week when 139 transfers of property were recorded. Mortgages and trust deeds numbered 142, an increase of ten, and the total of $378,727 was involved in financing operations. This was a gain of $83,711 for last week.

The Venice-Playa del Rey district, usually in fourth place, held second place in activity last week with 121 transfers of property. There was a gain of twenty-five deeds in that district. With 108 deeds filed, the Wilshire district was in third place in the last survey, but held second rank in realty financing operations. There were eighty-nine mortgages and trust deeds filed, carrying the total valuation of $696,640.

The Hollywood district ranked third in financing with sixty-seven mortgages and trust deeds involving the sum of $639,423, an increase of $144,856 for the week. Transfers of property numbered sixty for the last survey.

The highest gains in financing operations were made in the Westlake Park and the central business districts. In the former, twenty-four mortgages and trust deeds were filed with a valuation of $698,463, giving it first place in financing for the current survey. A gain of $541,713 was shown by the sudden spurt in financing. In the central business district, seven trust deeds and mortgages involved the sum of $279,750.

seventy-one miles of beach fronting Los Angeles county suitable and available for home sites and exclusive communities.

In commenting on the opportunity offered to acquire property in making a survey to investors as they prepare with an increase of 20 per cent in value during the past year, Los Angeles county beach property will continue to make steady headway as the demand continues to grow.

"Investors of several classes attracted by the investment value of Rancho Malibu in Ventura county," stated. "This is because of the fact that although restricted to the districts around Los Angeles, will continue to grow, there will be no new ocean frontage property remaining available. The beach frontage of desirable character in Los Angeles county is limited that less than one mile of a thousand in the city has a beach home unit from the remaining group. The significance of this situation is significant to the investor."

Survey Shows Beach Frontage is Timely Investment

The citizens committee of Parks, Playgrounds and Beaches, made a very interesting survey of beach property following the recent organization of the California Beach Ass'n. They found that there are today 240,000 families in Los Angeles that have no access to private frontage. Every foot of Los Angeles County sand beach available as desirable residential ocean frontage has already been subdivided and sold excepting 350 lots which are now on the market and five tracts that are being held by millionaires as an investment. ✦ As population increases, the demand for desirable private beach must force the doubling and redoubling of prices. This situation has unusual investment possibilities. ✦ We have included the data reported by the Park and Playground Committee in a discussion of beach frontage as an investment. We will gladly send you a copy upon request. Phone TRinity 2804 or send this coupon now.

HAROLD G. FERGUSON

According to Murray [illegible], executive vice president of the company, the study is based upon figures released by the Citizens' Committee of Fifty-Playgrounds and Beaches. The report shows that less than 3 per cent of the seventy-one miles of beach property fronting Los Angeles county is available and available for private home sites and exclusive bathing facilities.

In commenting on the study, Morgan declared that the opportunity offered to acquire beach property is making a strong appeal to investors as they realize that with an increase of 348 per cent in value during the past decade, Los Angeles county beach frontage will continue to make strides forward as the demand continues to grow.

"Investors of several classes are attracted by the investment feature of Rancho Malibu la Costa," he stated. "This is because of the fact that although residential and business districts around Los Angeles will continue to grow, there can be no new ocean frontage created. The remaining available residential beach frontage of desirable character in Los Angeles county is limited that less than one family in a thousand in the city can purchase a beach home unit from the small remaining group. The future significance of this situation is highly significant to the investor."

TRAFFIC COUNT STUDIED

Number of Cars Passing Intersection in Eight-Hour Period said to Indicate Property Values

Reflecting the growth in business and residential activities on La Brea avenue, 11,071 automobiles pass the intersection of La Brea and Beverly Boulevard during a period of eight hours, according to N. F. Wilson, president of Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd., which holds by lease, purchase or has an interest in almost a mile of Hollywood business and income frontage.

These figures, based on a check made by the Los Angeles Traffic Commission, indicate that La Brea-Beverly is one of the city's busiest motor traffic corners, Wilson said.

That property values follow increased motor traffic is evidenced by the fact that forty-four consecutive corners on La Brea avenue between Melrose avenue and Wilshire Boulevard have registered an average ten-year increase in assessed valuation of 5622.5 per cent, or 562.2 per cent annually, Wilson asserted. The gain in assessed valuation of the forty-four corners as a whole for the decade was $1,095,810, or an average increase in valuation of $24,464 for each lot.

Opening Date Set for Hotel Chain Addition

Hotel Turpin, the first San Francisco property to be operated by Consolidated Hotels, Inc., will be formally opened November 1, according to announcement here yesterday by J. L. Spicer, manager of operations for the hotel chain.

The Turpin, a six-story, 210-room structure, situated at 17 Powell street in the Bay City, recently was leased for fourteen years by the local hotel company. An improvement program involving expenditure of more than $100,000 now is under way and is being rushed to completion.

Architect H. A. Minton of San Francisco is supervising the improvement work, which is being handled by the Americommercial Corporation, subsidiary of the Bank of Italy. The work consists of painting and decorating, installation of new boilers and heating system, new elevators and furnishings in all rooms.

COMPANY MOVES OFFICE LOCATION

Heffron-McCray - St. John, realty broker of Hollywood and North Hollywood, last week moved their headquarters to 4525 Forman avenue, Toluca Lake Park, North Hollywood. Their former offices were located at 411 Hollywood Security Building. The concern is owner and developer of Toluca Lake Park.

Manufacturer Optimistic on Month Orders

An indication of the return of business to normal conditions is shown in recent orders received by the Ward Heater Company, Los Angeles manufacturers of floor furnaces, which reports August sales 25 per cent greater than any August in the history of the company. The concern recently made its first carload shipment, an order of 200 furnaces to Oklahoma City.

The Ward Heater Company is largely national, sending its products throughout the United States. It was purchased two years ago by H. H. Nelson, following the death of S. Sprout, its founder.

"We met with a business depression after January 1 but for the past six weeks we have noticed a decided pick-up and feel that the corner has been turned. Of the 200 furnaces sent to Oklahoma all had been previously sold for installation."

Fishing Reel Plant Opens in Hollywood

Another manufacturing plant has been added to Hollywood's industrial activity with the beginning of production by Arthur Kovalovsky of a new type reel for big-game fish. Quantities of the reel are being turned out at the plant at 7966 Santa Monica Boulevard.

Innovations in the manufacture of this portion of fishing equipment are said to be embodied in the new reel. It is made of the brake type without the use of leather or fiber, and carries with it a life-long guarantee. One set screw is said to control the drag and free spool.

Simplicity of control is declared to feature the reel, which was invented after years of effort by Kovalovsky.

SURVEY SHOWS CITY'S GROWTH

Anniversary Date Recalls Early Census

Eleven Families Inhabited City in 1781

Table Lists Valuation Gains for Nine Decades

Celebration of Los Angeles' 149th birthday on last Thursday witnesses a growth from a population of eleven families comprising forty-four persons on September 4, 1781, when Gov. Felipe De Neve founded Los Angeles, into the ranks of the metropolitan centers of the world with a population of 1,231,830 and an appraised wealth exceeding $5,000,000,000 in the city proper and $9,000,000,000 in the county, according to Gilbert H. Beesemyer, secretary of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association.

During the fifty-year period extending between 1786 and 1836 there was only one transfer of real estate recorded in Los Angeles county, as compared with a 1929 total of 586,465 instruments filed, he declares.

From a nucleus of eleven families in 1781 the wealth of Los Angeles county as measured by assessed valuation has increased from $350,000 in 1854 when county machinery was fully functioning, to $3,867,237,214 in 1930, according to the survey.

Assessed valuation totals not including intangible personal property every ten years since 1854 depict the growth of Los Angeles county:

1864	1,813,200
1874	13,063,716
1884	39,581,030
1894	78,487,230
1904	201,406,786
1914	691,205,660
1924	2,439,399,980
1930	3,867,237,214

CONVENTION CONTESTS ANNOUNCED

Trophies to be Awarded to Realty Boards Competing at Santa Cruz

Contests of skill and achievement, the winners of which will be awarded trophies, will be staged at Santa Cruz October 21-24, when the California Real Estate Association meets in twenty-sixth annual convention, according to announcement.

The Alhambra, Burbank, Long Beach, Oakland, Pasadena, San Diego, Santa Monica and Van Nuys real estate boards have announced that they will have entrants in the five-minute home town speech contest for the Fred E. Reed trophy, and others are now grooming speakers. With two wins each, Oakland and San Diego will attempt to gain permanent possession of the trophy.

Two achievement trophies will be awarded, one for the real estate board with full-time secretary submitting the best report, and one for the real estate board with part-time secretary submitting the best report in its class.

An advertising contest for real estate board display advertising, and an appraisal contest by real estate board committees submitting a report on the valuation of a certain property, together with three attendance contests and a golf tournament, complete the list of competitions in which the delegates will engage.

COLOR TO BE EMBODIED IN BUILDING

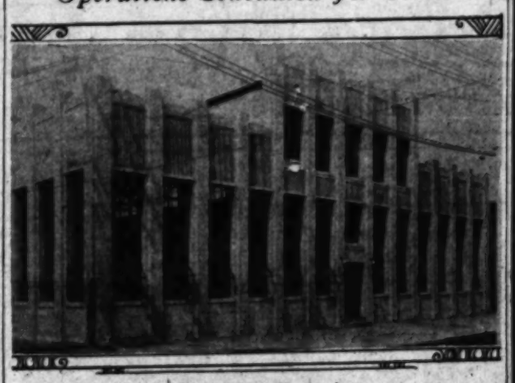
Contract Signed for Terra Cotta Facing of Thirteen-Story Structure

Color which will reflect more light into Hill and Fifth streets will be embodied in the Title Guarantee and Trust Building that shortly is to rise on the site of the old California Club structure, it became known yesterday with signing of a contract by Gladding, McBean & Co. for manufacture of all the terra cotta to be used on the building.

The edifice is to be full terra cotta faced for the entire thirteen stories, according to J. E. Stanton, chief of design for the clay products company. All the material will be manufactured in the Glendale plant. The terra cotta will be a light buff in color and will form a contrast to the subdued coloring of the building which is to be replaced, it is stated. The facing material will exhibit a recently developed texture, Stanton said.

Other contracts on the building awarded local manufacturers include those for the structural steel and elevators to Consolidated Steel Corporation, Ltd., and rock, sand and gravel to Consolidated Rock Products Company. John and Donald B. Parkinson are the architects and the P. J. Walker Company, builders. Paul Jeffers, engineer, will supervise steel erection.

Operations Scheduled for Plant



Opening Set for September

The Associated Piping and Engineering Company has taken a long-term lease on a steel-frame plant building recently completed by Buttress & McClellan, owners, at 1911 East Fifty-first street. Approximate cost was $75,000.

COUNTY OUTPUT ANALYZED

Four Principal Sources of Basic Wealth Account for $1,582,974,000 During Last Year

Los Angeles county's four principal sources of basic wealth during 1929 furnished an output valued at $1,582,974,000, with Los Angeles Harbor contributing to the growth and prosperity of the city's activities by handling 26,402,000 tons of commerce valued at $1,038,308,000, according to an analysis made by G. R. Dexter, president of the Bank of Hollywood, and based on Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce data.

Dexter's compilations show that 4215 industrial plants employing 104,000 persons with an annual pay roll of $160,000,000, produced commodities valued at $1,096,000,000. Tourist visitors to Los Angeles county contributed $350,000,000. Mining furnished $144,836,000, and the total value of agricultural commodities and live-stock produce was $92,138,000.

In the Hollywood area alone the motion-picture industry spent approximately $125,000,000 during 1929 in the production of films, the greater part of which amount was disbursed in wages and salaries, Dexter said.

HOME UNITS OF STATE AT HIGH FIGURE

California Residences to Reach 500,000 Total by Next Census Date

Los Angeles' tremendous roster of 397,681 residential buildings, of which 144,330 costing at permit valuation $655,308,432, have been constructed since 1920, will pass the 500,000-mark before the next census period at the present rate of home-building, according to Herbert N. Harwood, manager of the Western States Building and Loan Association, First and Broadway. With Los Angeles' population steadily advancing, each 1000 new residents mean not only the building of 100 new homes, but also an increase of $1,174,094 in the assessed valuation of unimproved lots in the city. This is equivalent to a gain of $2,348,188 in actual appraised valuation, Harwood declared.

HERBERT N. HARWOOD

Los Angeles' residential construction has been made possible by loans from building and loan associations, the combined California institutions now having more than $450,000,000 of loans in force principally on homes in Los Angeles and other cities in the State, he added.

Lido Isle Span to be Finished in Two Weeks

BALBOA, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Approaches to both ends of the new Lido Isle bridge connecting the island with the mainland will be completed in about two weeks, it is announced by David G. Duncan, sales manager for Lido Isle here.

Paving of the island is completed to the clubhouse and by the time the bridge is completed the paving will be finished around the island, it is expected. The improvement plan involving almost $2,000,000 will become a reality in about two months, it is said by Duncan. Rapid progress is being made in completing the installation of water, gas, sewer and other utility connections.

In addition to a house already constructed on the island there are two large residences being built there at the present. Other property owners are awaiting the completion of the bridge and the paving before they start the construction of their summer homes. Many leading celebrities of Hollywood plan building homes on Lido Isle, Duncan states.

ADDITIONAL FAMILIES MOVE TO COMMUNITY

Twenty-three new families found homes in Fontana during July, according to records of the Fontana water department. It is estimated that the increase in population was about 100, thus maintaining the record of 2 per cent growth per month, which Fontana upheld throughout the last decade.

BUILDING OF RESIDENCE UNDER WAY

Home One of Four Being Constructed, with Six Others to Follow

Construction was started yesterday in the Outpost, Hollywood development controlled by the C. E. Toberman Company, on a California-Monterey design of home by Walter P. Lohman on his recently purchased estate, according to Parker V. Foster, executive of the company. The entire investment, including site, will be approximately $30,000. Plans were created by Rollin P. Pierson, who also has charge of the building operations.

The Lohman home is one of four residences that are now being erected in the Outpost; the others being the residences of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Harris, Donald M. Hughes and Mrs. Maude Mills. The total valuation of the homes now under actual construction amounts to $140,000, including the sites, Foster reports.

Within the next thirty days, six additional homes will be started in the Outpost representing a total investment of more than $200,000, including the estates. Plans have been submitted and approved by the Outpost architectural jury for these residences.

FACT AND COMMENT

only to holders of trust certificates but to general property owners as well.

Neighborhood Growth

Decision of many eastern manufacturers to locate branch plants or offices in Los Angeles has not been influenced by the growth of this city alone but also by the increase in population of tributary territory. Los Angeles is the center from which wholesalers and branch offices supply surrounding territory.

Evidence of the growth of its neighboring cities is shown in the last census figures. Within a ten-mile area are eighteen incorporated cities and towns with a combined population of 337,909 persons. In addition to this are many persons residing in unincorporated sections within the ten-mile radius, making Los Angeles city the center of one of the greatest markets for wholesalers and manufacturers in the country.

Retail trade here also benefits by this territory, many residence owners of these smaller cities making weekly or monthly pilgrimages to the metropolis on buying trips. Within the limits of the Los Angeles shopping area there reside approximately 2,500,000 persons.

Increase in growth of this area is as certain as is the growth of the city itself and may be taken as a guarantee of future business and prosperity for merchants.

FORMER OIL FIELD PAVING REPLACED

TERRA BELLA, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—The new road into the Terra Bella oil fields on the line between Sec. 34 and 35, the "hot spot" of the present stage of development here, has been completed, replacing the old road from the south which was dubbed Terra Bella's roller coaster by visiting motorists who had to negotiate its two dips.

BUSINESS LOT SOLD

BELL, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—B. B. Barnwell, president of the Southeast Realty Board, has sold a business lot on Baker avenue between Heliotrope Drive and Palm street, to a Mr. Hurst for a consideration of $5000. The property is to be improved.

CONSTRUCTION PLANS ∞ QUESTIONS ANSWERED

PLAN STRESSES COMPACTNESS

Unusually Small Residence Well Proportioned

Terrace Might be Used as Dinette, Sun Room

House Typically Californian with Simple Lines

The sketch here reproduced, for which L. Nygard was awarded honorable mention in the competition held by McGrath and Selover, is of an unusually small house which is still appealing and well balanced in appearance, home designers state.

The floor area is a little more than 900 square feet, and within this space is included almost everything requisite to efficient housekeeping, it is declared. The functions of living and dining are combined in one room, while the adjoining terrace may be used both as dinette and sun room, expanding the possibilities of the house without involving much greater expenditure.

It was the designer's idea to make the house typically Californian in feeling, and to this end the simple, substantial lines, the red tile roof with only a slight projection over the plastered walls, are stressed. Use of decoration is reserved for the entrance. Exterior attraction has been gained by the effective placing of doors and windows.

The outside dimensions are twenty-eight by thirty-seven feet, so that the house is adaptable to a small lot, and the building cost can probably be kept within $3000 if necessary.

Two Historic Structures Lost to City

REDLANDS, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) Redlands is losing two historic buildings with the demolition of the McAbee block in the center of the business section, and the chapel building at the University of Redlands.

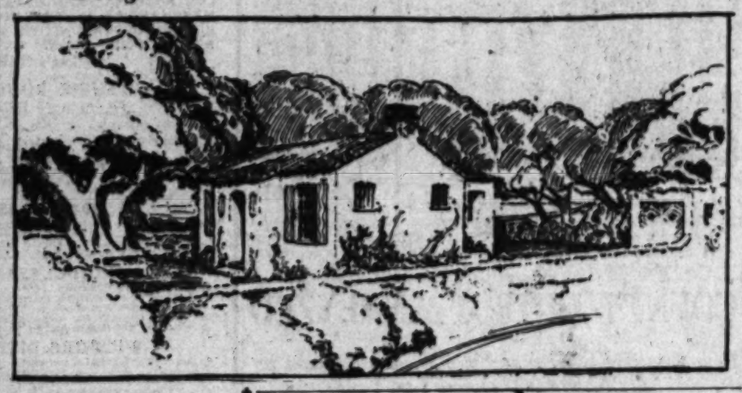
The McAbee block was for many years the most important business block in the city. It was built in 1886 and for forty-five years has been a business center here.

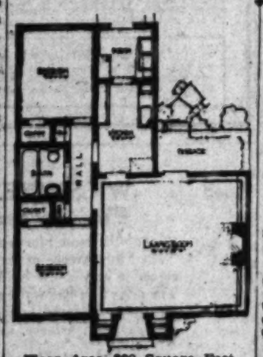
At the old chapel building, most of the gatherings in the early days of the university were held. The edifice has been replaced by a memorial chapel.

LIGHTING FIXTURES OF PEWTER AVAILABLE

Lighting fixtures are now available in light or dark pewter finishes that give an air of antiquity, manufacturers report. Pixtures of early American derivation are declared particularly beautiful in this covering which is applied over a rust-resisting metal. Candles, lanterns, sconces, or brackets of pewter will fit in with any scheme of decoration whether period or modernistic, lending charm to the interior and entrance doorway of a home, it is further stated.

Design Awarded Honorable Mention in Contest





Floor Area 900 Square Feet

Details of the above plan may be examined at the Small House Plan Service, 6937 Lexington avenue, Hollywood.

ARCHITECT'S WORK STAYS ON DISPLAY

Illustrations of Effort as Landscape Designer Also Included in Exhibit

The exhibition of the work of Mark Daniels, architect, will remain until the 15th inst., in the Architects Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets, according to announcement yesterday. Daniels has designed many of the homes in Bel-Air, including the Times Demonstration Home, the Charles W. Boggs residence, and many others. He is also responsible for the Hollywood Riviera Beach Club, the Administration Building at Bel Air and the Castellammare Community Center Building, and has designed a castle to be built in Madrid for the Marquis de Portago.

In addition to the architectural renderings and photographs, the exhibition includes illustrations of Daniels's work as a landscape architect. These consist of photographs and sketches of gardens designed and executed by him and a large colored sketch of the grounds and golf course of the Arizona Biltmore Hotel.

HOME BUILDERS' PRIMER

(Conducted by the Home Modernization Department of the Los Angeles Builders' Exchange. Questions will be answered without cost, and selected ones will be used in response to inquiries if letters are addressed to this department of "The Times.")

Question: Is there a satisfactory material for use under carpets to prevent wear?

Answer: Yes, there are two very satisfactory materials which are economical and can be cut to any size to fit under rugs or carpets. Names of local dealers will be sent on request.

Q.: We are building a pool in our garden and would like to have a fountain playing in it. Is there any way we can use the water over again to prevent waste.

A.: There are small motor-driven pumps designed for this purpose which are very economical to run and not expensive to buy. With their use one can have not only fountains, but small rivulets and miniature waterfalls in the garden without waste of water. Detailed information on request.

Q.: We are remodeling our kitchen. Can we get a sink that will not stain?

A.: Acid-resisting enamels are now perfected which solve this problem. They are available for all fixtures at small additional cost. Ask your plumber for acid-resisting enamel on your sink or send to the bureau for pamphlet information.

Q.: Is there a wall paper with a painted surface which is washable?

A.: There is a very remarkable paper now on the market which has been used extensively. The paper is treated hydraulically with seven coats of paint. The paper is perfectly washable, nonfading, and even ink stains can be removed from it without injury. Hundreds of very beautiful designs are available and on display in Los Angeles. Literature and samples on request.

Q.: Can wood panels be put on over old plaster in our living room?

A.: This can be done easily and very beautiful results can be had in any of several woods. Rectangular panels in Oregon pine, oak, gum, or Philippine mahogany are charming. Long vertical panels in the early American manner of redwood or knotty pine will also put a fresh and interesting note into the room architecture. Paneling is a very effective way to modernize a room.

The National Lumber Manufacturers' Association publish a booklet which would interest you.

Q.: We need some additional electric outlets in our living room and bedrooms. Is this a difficult or expensive thing to do?

A.: Ordinarily this presents no difficult or expensive problem if existing circuits are not overloaded. The bureau can refer you to reliable electricians who will give you accurate information and an estimate of cost.

Literature and further details on all items discussed in this column will be forwarded upon request to the Home Modernizing Bureau, care of The Times.

APARTMENT SKYSCRAPER ANNOUNCED

Modern Architectural Style to Feature Both Exterior, Interior

Architect Marcus P. Miller has been commissioned by the Cherokee Properties, Ltd., to prepare plans for a ten-story, basement and sub-basement, Class A apartment building, to be built on the southwest corner of Cherokee and Franklin avenue. The building will consist of approximately 240 rooms, divided into eighty-nine apartments with both basements used for garage facilities for the tenants of the building.

The building, exterior and interior, will be designed in the modern style of architecture. The building is planned so that all double apartments are corner apartments with their living-rooms and dining-rooms having two exposures.

On the ground floor the entrance lobby, stair and elevator lobby and lounge will be designed, decorated and furnished in "Moderne." Elevators, a steam heating plant, ventilating system and refrigeration system are included in the plans.

The cost of this project, including grounds, building and furnishings, will be in excess of $800,000. The financing has already been completed.

S. J. Kass and Frank E. Ruben of the firm of Kass & Ruben, are the principal officers of the Cherokee Properties, Ltd., a corporation, owner of this building.

NEW TRACT OPENINGS REPORTED

Year to Date Witnesses 143 County Subdivisions Opened Up

Four new tracts, containing in all 206 parcels of land, were officially opened during August in Los Angeles county. This year to date has witnessed the filing in this county of 143 new subdivisions, aggregating 8537 lots, according to the California Title Insurance Company.

Los Angeles city accounted for two of last month's new subdivisions, one of which was a 128-lot tract in the Del Rey area. New tracts filed in Los Angeles city since the first of the year, classified according to the building map shown on this page, are as follows:

Garage Doors Offer Color Opportunity

Its doors particularly may give the garage individuality, builders declare. Stencil designs may be used to form a border or to decorate the center of a panel. The designs may also introduce a note of color, such as buff colored body and a brown trim. The stenciled motifs may be finished in burnt orange and dull blue, a color combination which stands out effectively on the buff-colored doors.

Striping also makes a finish for the garage door that is suitable for decoration, it is stated. Narrow bands of the color used for the trim or the roof of the house may be placed around the panels. Where narrow boards are used for the doors, a two-tone effect is created by painting the boards alternating colors, such as gray and dark green, tan and brown, or beige and maroon.

If the garage doors are at the front of the house, or in a position at all conspicuous, the decorative touch will dispel the effect of a broad, uninteresting wall space that garage doors sometimes produce.

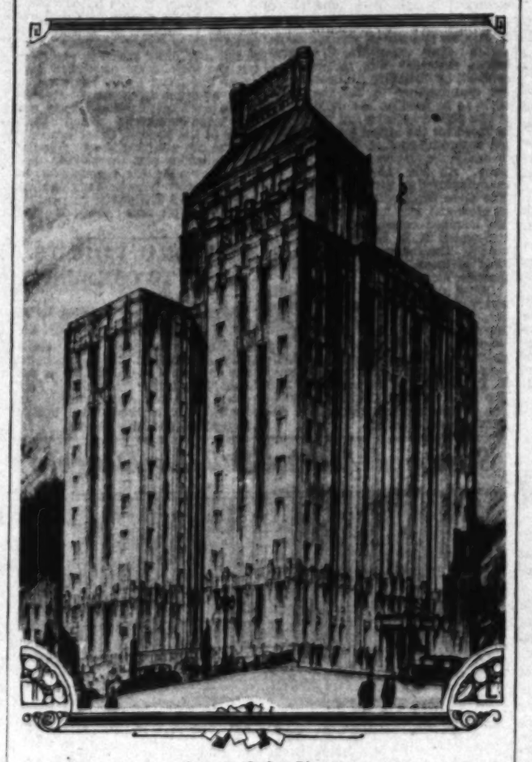
Permits Show Building Gains in Valley Area

VAN NUYS, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) With the granting of permits during the week for the construction of a service station and a number of dwellings, building figures in the San Fernando Valley are showing a gain. The Texas Company was awarded a permit for the erection of a $2000 garage, a $1190 store and an $800 restroom at 5410 Lankershim Boulevard.

Neil P. Boddington will erect a dwelling to cost $1900 at 12014 Hartsook street. Permit for a residence at 12212 Wicks avenue to cost $7000 was granted to Katherine Hayes.

Others granted permits are C. M. Loop, residence at 5030 Riverton avenue, to cost $2500; F. A. Chew, residence at 9027 San Fernando Road, to cost $1500; Adolph Norvoid, restaurant building at 4961 Van Nuys Boulevard, to cost $1500.

Hollywood Structure to Rise



Owners Order Plans

Plans for a ten-story, basement and sub-basement, Class A apartment building, to rise at the southwest corner of Cherokee and Franklin avenues, are to be prepared by Architect Marcus P. Miller for the Cherokee Properties, Ltd. Cost of the project, including site and furnishings, is estimated to be in excess of $800,000.

INSTRUCTOR WRITES DECORATION SERIES

Mildred Mellow Bateson

The first of the series will appear in this section of The Times next Sunday.

Instructions for Painting Stucco Given

Painting stucco widens the color choice and makes it possible to tie up the house more harmoniously with neighboring houses and the surrounding landscape, builders declare.

If the stucco surface is thoroughly dry or has aged sufficiently, the painting job will be most successful.

Freshly formed cement should be treated with a neutralizing wash, produced from eight ounces of zinc sulphate crystals dissolved in a gallon of water. This is brushed or sprayed on the surface and allowed to dry before the paint is applied.

The addition of an extra quantity of oil or varnish or the use of a China wood oil priming paint is advisable for the priming coat which must bind the loose particles of stucco on the surface and supply a foundation for the subsequent coats.

For the finishing coats, a high-grade house paint is suitable, it is stated.

PITTSBURGH GRADED TAX LAW

Under the Pittsburgh Graded Tax Law land and buildings are taxed separately, the land being taxed twice as much as the buildings. Furthermore, there is no tax on personal property in Pittsburgh.

As noted, there seem to be very decided differences of opinion as to the merits of this experiment in taxation, the preponderance of opinion being that the method is a failure.

Thomas C. McMahon, chief assessor of Pittsburgh, is one of the proponents of the system. On the other hand, among those who condemn it are such outstanding authorities as Dr. Richard Ely of Wisconsin University, Prof. E. R. A. Seligman of Columbia University, a national tax authority, Edward Daume, chairman of the committee on taxation and assessments of the Pittsburgh Realty Board, and others.

The arguments advanced for and against the Pittsburgh system are substantially as follows:

The advocates of the system claim: Greater amount of building has resulted. Owners cannot afford to hold unimproved land. The system has forced the subdivision of many large estates formerly occupied by palatial residences. Taxes have been lightened on high-grade business, industrial and housing properties (substantiation of this not at all conclusive.)

Chief Assessor McMahon claims that he has heard no serious objections to the plan; that all the daily papers indorse it as well as every member of the City Council. He, however, frankly admits that the system has brought about no lowering of taxes.

PLAN NOT SUCCESSFUL

The objections advanced against the plan are: The system tends to overproduction of the larger business and income buildings. It discourages the liberal use of land sites for homes, virtually forcing small home owners to cut their lots to the minimum. It has resulted in considerable inequality in taxation, tax rates on various downtown properties varying from 1.54 per cent to 2.45 per cent. It has retarded sales of real estate, as the cheapening of land through excessive taxing has created a falling real estate market. It is a well-known fact that it is difficult to sell anything on a falling market, particularly real estate.

Tax experts generally point out that to tax land equitably it is imperative that land be first properly classified. A tax which is levied at the same rate on all real estate regardless of the nature or use of the real property will, in a great many instances, operate unjustly and inequitably against owners of some classes of real property. The earning power of the real property should, in the opinion of the majority of our tax authorities, be the basis of real property taxation; that is, the potential as well as the present earning power. Such a tax would have a tendency to eliminate inefficient owners, who are unable to make their properties measure up in earning power to similar and similarly located properties.

Some excellent suggestions as to the proper classification of land may be found in Prof. Hinman's article on "The Economic Importance of Real Estate Classification" in the

FILINGS OF PAST WEEK REPORTED

Totals for Five Days Fall Below Figures of Period Immediately Preceding

Real estate filings in Los Angeles county for last week, a five-day period, reached a total of 3229, as compared with 6038 for the previous week and 6928 for the corresponding week of 1929.

The number of instruments of all types filed during the seven-months' period of 1930 ending August 1 totaled 316,989, as against 283,196 for the full year 1921; 394,904 for 1922; 466,000 for 1923, and 476,804 for 1924, according to the regular weekly report of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company. The survey points out that 1923 and 1924 were classed as record real estate years and that filings for 1930 to date indicate that this year's total number of instruments recorded will exceed those of either 1923 or 1924.

Last week's transactions show that 2302 deeds were filed as compared with 2569 for the previous week; 1297 trust deeds, as against 1446; 117 mortgages as compared with 126; 809 reconveyances, as against 1093; 609 releases of mortgages as, compared with 479; 219 notices of completion, as against 203, and 130 leases as against 154.

GROWTH OF TAX ROLLS HERE TOLD

Los Angeles Shown to Have 1,400,000 Parcels of Taxable Property

Los Angeles city now has approximately 1,400,000 parcels of real estate on its assessment rolls and the county has 336,000, a total of 1,736,000 as compared with a county tax roll comprising 285 taxpayers in 1850, the year in which the city was incorporated, Charles L. Swanton, vice-president of the United States Building and Loan Association, recalled yesterday in connection with the celebration last week of the 149th anniversary of the founding of Los Angeles city.

CHARLES L. SWANTON

Swanton explained that in 1850 Los Angeles county embraced a greater area than it does today, extending from Tulare in the north to a point south of the present southern boundary and eastward to the Colorado River. The first taxpayer whose property came under Los Angeles' initial assessment roll was Andres Machado, who died here in 1928, Swanton said. He was the head of the original Machado family, owners of extensive ranchos.

HOME PERMIT ISSUED

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Edna M. Hill has taken out a permit for the erection of a stucco duplex and garage at 5166 Hollywood Drive. The building is to be two stories with tile roof and will cost about $11,000.

CONSTRUCTION SCHEDULE MAINTAINED

Shifts Work Day and Night to Complete Boys' School

Aerial Perspective of Buildings Shown

KEEPING abreast of schedule, 300 workmen of the Austin Company, contractors, are working in day and night shifts to complete the erection of the new home of the Urban School for Boys at Beverly Boulevard and Layton Drive.

The administration building of the principal group is reported as practically complete, with roofing under way. It is surmounted by a four-story tower. The adjoining residential and classroom units, which are connected with the former structure by inclosed passages on both floors, linked with corridors that traverse the length of the three buildings, are expected to be ready in approximately ten days for interior finishing.

The swimming pool was the first of the subsidiary structures to be completed and the playfields have been staked out, ready for grading and tamping. The entire educational plant, which represents a reported investment of $300,000 and covers seven acres, is to be ready in time for the opening of Urban's twenty-seventh year on the 29th inst., according to assurance given President B. O. McDonnell.

Early California architectural ideas prevail in the main structures. New process window glass, reputed to transmit ultraviolet rays, is introduced throughout.

The administrative, residential and classroom buildings occupy an elevation on Layton Drive while the secondary structures, inclusive of gymnasium, swimming pool, stables and recreative areas, are on lower ground. Harrison B. Traver is the architect.

OIL COMPANY BUYS BOULEVARD CORNER

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—A deal has been closed here whereby Oscar A. Duncan, business man and real estate subdivider, has sold the southeast corner of Lankershim and Magnolia Boulevards to the Union Oil Company for a cash consideration not stated. The company will build on the lot some time in the early fall. The lot is 100 by 198 feet.

OBSOLESCENCE COMBATED

Future Design Changes Declared Far Less Likely to Affect Basic Methods of Construction

Business buildings that will resist obsolescence for 200 or more years were predicted yesterday by W. J. Van Valkenburgh, vice-president of the Blue Diamond Corporation, local building materials manufacturers, in connection with a company report on trends in building material uses.

Buildings constructed in the most advanced modes of today, he stated, have a much better chance of continuing up to date and of earning greater profits for their owners, than structures built even a decade ago. Many building materials, including steel, concrete, terra cotta and other facings, are already scientifically developed to last through centuries without noticeable deterioration, and still other substances used in construction are rapidly being brought to a degree of perfection where, for practicable purposes, deterioration will be conquered, he pointed out.

"In connection with our modern office structures, it is well to bear in mind that the most drastic changes in design and use of materials occurred in their early stages of development," Van Valkenburgh said. "There may be further startling changes in design in the future, but the important thing is that these future changes are far less likely than in the past to affect basic methods of construction. Improvements and new conveniences will probably be of such a kind that buildings already standing can be continually modernized and kept up to date at comparatively small expense."

The great improvement in manufactured fireproofing materials which has been effected in recent years was also referred to by the executive as an additional factor calculated to materially increase the life span of the modern office and mercantile structure. Obsolescence, which has always been regarded as the greatest destroyer of property values, is about to be vanquished through the joint efforts of architects, engineers and manufacturers of building materials and equipment, Van Valkenburgh declared.

Shifts of business and population centers as a contributing factor in bringing about obsolescence have been very much over-rated, he added, these shifts being more often the result than the cause of depreciated building values. Instances can be produced where a good building has been depreciated by such shifts, he admitted, but he contended that for every such instance, two can be found where otherwise good neighborhoods have been ruined by their buildings.

ARCHITECTS OF WORLD TO MEET

Organization to be Invited to United States

Washington May be Host to Next Convention

Many Topics for Discussion at Budapest Session

The International Congress of Architects will be asked to hold its 1931 meeting in the United States, it is announced by the American Institute of Architects. The opening sessions are planned for Washington in connection with the annual convention of the Institute. Later the Congress would convene in New York, and, as a part of the architectural program of the World Exposition, in Chicago.

The invitation will be extended by Frank C. Baldwin of Washington, secretary of the institute, who has been designated by President Hoover as the American delegate to the Twelfth International Congress at Budapest, the 7th to 14th inst.

Practically all of the leading nations have notified the International Permanent Committee of Architects that they have accepted the invitation of the Hungarian government to participate in the 1930 congress, according to E. C. Kemper, executive secretary of the institute.

The themes for the Budapest congress, as made public by George Oakley Totten, Jr., secretary of the American section of the International Permanent Committee, are: The economical education of architects, the results obtained hitherto by the chamber of architects, the intellectual ownership of the architects, the role of the architects in the industrial buildings, and the acoustics of large halls.

With the co-operation of architects of twenty nations, an exhibition of architectural designs, illustrating architectural development since the World War, will be held at Budapest.

PERMITS INCREASE IN AUGUST

Hollywood Area Records Gain Compared to Totals for July

August building permits in the Hollywood district totaled $1,201,135, a gain of nearly $400,000 compared to July, according to Harry E. Jones, president of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce.

Among the month's larger permits are the John Marshall High School at 5520 Tracy street for $400,000; Multimotor, Ltd., foundation and concrete and brick film laboratory at 7020 Romaine street, $125,000, also permit for addition to this building, $25,000; La Cienega Company, Ltd., apartment building at 8500 Fountain avenue, $125,000; David Waldman, thirty-two-room apartment at 1961 Palmerston Place, $35,000; Teofilo D. Valdez, fifty-room apartment building at 1818 North Hudson avenue, $31,000; E. Bernstein, thirty-two-room apartment at 1926 North Kenmore avenue, $25,000; John Eckert, thirty-two-room apartment at 6250 Leland Way, $30,000; Stern Holding Company, brick restaurant at 1433-5 North Vine street, $25,000. Permits for twenty-six dwellings totaled $148,400.

ENGINEERS FORM GROUP

Los Angeles is to be headquarters for the Southern California chapter of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, a national organization devoted to the advancement of the arts and sciences of heating and ventilation, according to announcement.

A charter was recently granted by the national society for the forming of the chapter. Membership now exceeds fifty, and it is expected that there will be more than 100 members in the near future. Several meetings have been held and officers have been elected. The committee on programs has arranged for some of the leading authorities in the profession to present papers of interest at the monthly dinner meetings, it is reported.

The officers of the chapter are O. W. Ott, president; E. L. Ellingwood, vice-president; H. B. Keeling, secretary; Leo Hungerford, treasurer.

Credit for the organization of the chapter is given to Edwin C. Evans, who recently arrived in Los Angeles from the East.

Money is now available as in the past several years for attractive loans in acceptable locations on real estate in Los Angeles and immediate vicinity.
Our supply is from the East, where accumulations in large quantities are always seeking investment and at lower rates than can be had in the West, where so much money is needed for development.
A 5% loan after commission is added means only 5 2-5% to the borrower over a 5-to-7-year period.

ARCHITECTURE, AVIATION UNITE

Airport Structures Meet High Standards

Suitability of Spanish Type Design Revealed

Two Hangars Erected as City Investment

Architectural art has united effectively with aviation in the designing of the permanent buildings at the Los Angeles Airport, according to R. B. Barnitz, city airport director. The administration building, hangars, and other structures at this newly developed harbor for aircraft have been planned and constructed both under the supervision of the Department of Airports, and to suit the judgment of the Municipal Art Commission, Barnitz states.

The result is regarded as a combination of structures which meet the highest standards of airport planning, which are adapted to their purpose for housing the operations of Southern California's largest airport, and at the same time are architecturally beautiful. One of the features of the co-operation has been to reveal the suitability of the Spanish - American architectural motif to the buildings.

Two hangars have just been completed at the airport, representing an $83,000 investment for the city of Los Angeles, and adding a total of 43,000 square feet to the floor space in the municipal airplane housings. One of the hangars now is occupied by the California Aerial Transport Company and the other by the Pacific Aeromotive Corporation.

Two previously built hangars, with total floor space of 32,000 feet, flank the administration building, which rises into a tower surmounted by an airways beacon which at night flashes the letters "L. A." in the Morse code. All future construction at the airport will be in conformity with a plan worked out jointly by the airport administration and the Art Commission, assuring the ultimate completion of an airport second to none in the United States, either from the standpoint of aviation engineering or architectural splendor, Director Barnitz declares.

Council Lets Paving Work

The Sully-Miller Contracting Company has been awarded the contract by the Long Beach City Council for the improvement of Magnolia avenue between Tenth and Anaheim streets.

The contract for this improvement calls for the use of approximately 56,761 square feet of six-inch asphalt pavement.

Structures Bring Additional Activity

One of the largest hangars in the West, accommodating forty planes, and located at the Los Angeles Airport, is pictured above, the upper of the two buildings. It is to be used for general aviation field and repair business, and has storage shop and office space. The building shown in the lower picture is used as a school building, and has necessary storage space for planes, office and classroom space and shops.

PROGRAMS OVER RADIO SPONSORED

Realty Board Executive Stresses Upward Trend of Values

The Los Angeles Realty Board, under the direction of Mason Case, vice-president of the Harold O. Ferguson Corporation, is sponsoring a series of radio programs, supplementing the newspaper advertising campaign which has been commented upon nationally and which is declared to have played an important part in establishing Los Angeles real estate as a sound investment.

"Seasoned real estate investors," said Case, "who have made fortunes by the purchase of well-selected property, realize that the average value of land in a given area increases just as rapidly as population grows; that the trend of property values is steadily upward, in spite of temporary depressions in general business conditions that affect prices.

"Such investors take advantage of periods of comparative inactivity and lack of demand, which comes in more or less regular cycles of once in seven or eight years, on an average. It is then that they buy carefully chosen property at bargain prices, and are in a position to make large profits when the inevitable reaction sets in, which sends prices to the peak. Already buying on a large scale by big investors has begun. Soon the small investor will follow, and a period of great activity in buying property and building will be under way, accompanied by rising prices, until the peak is reached."

Tract Boasts Rapid Orchard Development

Substantiating its claim to being the subtropical empire of San Diego county, Vista Irrigation district now boasts more than 4000 acres of avocado and citrus orchards developed within four years, according to Charles N. Bell, engineer-manager of the district.

A recent survey conducted by Grover T. Russell, sales manager for the Hart organization, showed that within a 2100-acre area, owners have expended approximately $274,000 in the development of orchards. For this one locality, nursery withdrawals indicate that 26,500 avocado trees and 9500 citrus trees have been planted, together with a variety of other subtropical and deciduous trees. Buyers also have erected sixty-three homes, exclusive of residential and business buildings constructed on the townsite portions of this tract, Russell states.

UNIVERSITY OPENS CLASSES

Extension Division Offers Courses in Legal and Economic Phases of Real Estate

Fall classes in the legal and economic phases of real estate principles and practice are announced by the University of California Extension Division, Hillstreet Building.

Opening the 12th inst., a course of fifteen two-hour meetings will be offered in the Economic Basis of Real Estate Appraising, with Ivan A. Thorson as instructor. The meetings will be conducted on Fridays, from 7 to 9 p.m. A study will be made of trends and influences which affect urban land values, and an analysis will be presented of "Standards of Appraisal Practice," issued by the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

The brokers' and salesmen's course, consisting of eight two-hour meetings, each Tuesday and Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m., opening the 9th inst. will be repeated, as heretofore, every month. The courses are compiled before each examination for brokers' licenses. Ivan A. Thorson is the instructor.

The same course, divided into fifteen, two-hour meetings, for those who prefer to meet but once a week and desire to extend their study beyond the requirements of the State examinations, is offered each Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m., beginning the 10th. inst. Samuel Steelman is the instructor.

The usual course in appraisals, conducted by John P. Kennedy, will be offered in a series of fifteen two-hour meetings, beginning the 18th inst., and thereafter each Thursday from 7 to 9 p.m.

ANNOUNCING

Los Angeles Times

"Sports Edition of the Air"

Now comes the Los Angeles Times Sports Edition of the Air. A review which includes interviews with celebrities, discussions of the many branches of the sports world, opinions on interscholastic and intercollegiate athletics, forecasts of the results of the major football games of the season, answers to questions pertinent to the realm of indoor and outdoor recreation will be inaugurated by the Los Angeles Times as a regular feature of the Don Lee Station KHJ beginning at 9:30 next Thursday night the 11th inst.

PAUL LOWRY

This half hour under the sport's light will be ushered in by Paul Lowry, sports editor of The Times, and Braven Dyer of The Times sports staff. They will give the first general report for 1930 on what the prospects are in the ranks of eligibles for the Pacific Coast football teams. New styles of play will be discussed and the changes in play which will be installed by new coaches will be explained, together with a review of the men who are entering the gridiron field as mentors of 1930 football stars.

A feature of the half hour will be ten minutes given to questions and answers.

If you want to know something about your favorite team; if you want to know what your favorite coach is thinking about this season; if there has been an argument in the office or at home over some controversial question which concerns football, get your query into The Times office right away. Each question will be answered personally by either Mr. Lowry or Mr. Dyer. While questions which affect any division of sports will be answered over KHJ, the program arranged for next Thursday night will be given over exclusively to football. All questions should be addressed "Sports Edition of the Air," Times Building, Los Angeles.

BRAVEN DYER

Here is an introduction to the Los Angeles Times team who will greet you over KHJ next Thursday night with the Sports Edition of the Air.

ALL-AROUND CHAMPION

Paul Lowry, sports editor of The Times, has been actively connected with Southern California athletics ever since corner of Seventh and Figueroa was "way out in the country." He not only appreciates sports from the spectators' point of view and understands them from the standpoint of the expert, but he is undoubtedly the all-around athletic champion of the sports writers of the Coast.

He attended Occidental Preparatory School and participated in football, baseball, tennis and track. He competed in the high jump, pole vault, hurdles and the weight events. He took his college work at the University of California at Berkeley, where he was the best shot-putter in college at the time. During his college days he was regarded as one of the best tennis prospects among the younger players, while as a golfer he shoots in the eighties. Lowry enjoys sports because he understands them and is planning a unique feature for the radio sports edition. Among other things, later on in the season, he is going to tell of the early achievements of the men and women he knows who live in Southern California, who in their younger days were "some pumpkins" in school athletics. Your next-door neighbor may have been a shining light on the tennis court; your office associate a football star, your husband an intercollegiate boxing champion, or your wife a star sprinter. In conjunction with this later feature Lowry will introduce Bill Henry, another veteran of the sports field in Southern California and a member of The Times staff, as his team-mate during this unique broadcast.

VETERAN OF ATHLETICS

Now for Dyer: Braven Dyer ten years ago was one of Pomona's brightest athletic lights—and those were the days when Pomona was not only winning the championship of the Southern California Conference but making things uncomfortable for the University of Southern California and for the Berkeley Bears as well. Dyer was an All-Southern end, played forward on the basketball team and pitched for the varsity nine. He turned his talent to golf a year ago and now shoots in the eighties. Dyer is well known to radio sports fans for his broadcast of the basketball, football and other games and brings to readers of The Times and listeners-in the picture of sports through the eye of one who knows what he's talking about. He has a large following among the younger boys in grammar and junior high schools for the work he has done during the past two years in the Junior Olympic Games program in Southern California, a juvenile pentathlon sponsored by The Times.

EVERY THURSDAY NIGHT

Programs are being arranged ahead of time to present the snappiest broadcast of the season over The Times Sports Edition of the Air. There is a real treat in store for radio listeners, so put 9:30 down every Thursday night on your radio schedule with your dial turned to the Don Lee Station KHJ and don't forget to send in the questions that you wish answered.

BRITISH POLO FOUR TRIMMED

Local Ace Scores Five of Team's Ten Goals

Yankees Overtake Britons to Win, 10 to 5

Lacey and Roark Brilliant for Losers

BY GRANTLAND RICE
(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance)

MEADOWBROOK (L. I.) Sept. 6. Once more riding "hell for leather" with the might of the wallop added, the Big Four of the United States rolled back another British polo attack at Meadowbrook this afternoon as 40,000 looked on.

LEWIS LACEY

The United States won the first of the big international series by 10 goals to 5, coming from behind in a wild whirl after the first period to cut away the British lead and then gallop and cut an open way to victory.

PUT UP BATTLE

For the first three periods the British put up a hard, gallant and even battle, but as the match wore along the superior pony speed and the harder hitting of the American four took full charge of the match and turned the closing periods into something approaching a runaway. The British side fought with fine desperation throughout in a defense and an attack led by Pat Roark and Lewis Lacey, but the harder hitting of Pedley, Hitchcock, Hopping and Guest were more than the British defense could stand. This combined speed and power, thrown in with a wild rush after the first two periods, was more than the British could meet and hold in check.

The day was perfect for polo with a blue sky, a keen wind and a fast, dry field. The two stands were packed, with thousands standing and for the first few periods there was every evidence of a close battle and a medley of thrills, for both sides set a fast, rough pace from the jump. There was no wavering, no giving ground as all eight contestants took desperate chances in the drive up and down the long, green field.

The British got the jump through the fine work of Lacey and Roark, both great polo players, but the early brilliancy of Pedley, the consistent play of Hitchcock and Guest and the big bound that Hopping took after the start soon made the British task a hopeless one. In the majority of instances the American side had the faster ponies the greater speed in getting to the ball and in addition to this the mallets of Hitchcock

MEADOWBROOK (L. I.) Sept. 6.—Tommy Hitchcock was master of the field from the first chukker in the polo battle with Great Britain here today, ranging up, down and across to snatch the white willow ball from beneath the feet of his rivals. He was ably supported by young Eric Pedley, the hard-riding, sharp-shooting Californian, the first of the westerners to play on an international team. It was Pedley with his rifle-true mallet who smashed through five of the United States team's ten goals from his No. 1 position. He scored four in the first half.

Bags Forty-seventh Circuit Wallop as Chicago Outslugs Pittsburgh by 19-to-14 Tally

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 6. (AP)—The National League champion Chicago Cubs, who are fighting hard to repeat this season, won an even break with Pittsburgh in the four-game series, emerging victorious, 19 to 14, in a slugging match today.

The Cubs got away to a six-run lead in the first two innings but the Pirates scored four in the second and four more in the fourth and were leading, 12 to 9, when the visitors went to bat in the eighth. The Cubs made ten runs in the last two innings to win the game.

HACK WILSON

Hack Wilson hit his forty-seventh home run in the ninth.

Defends Del Monte Women's Championship Today

DEL MONTE, Sept. 6. (AP)—Mrs. Leona Pressler of Hollywood, defending titlist, and Mrs. Brent Potter of San Jose won their matches today in the Del Monte championship for women and will meet tomorrow in the eighteen-hole finals.

Shooting the kind of golf that won her the title last year, Mrs. Pressler was one over par when she defeated Miss Bea Gottlieb of Los Angeles, 4 and 3, today.

Mrs. Potter advanced to the finals when she nosed out Miss Hermine

Finals Over Pebble Beach Today

PEBBLE BEACH, Sept. 6. (AP)—From the gallery with near-perfect brilliant recoveries and breath-taking putts, Francis Brown of Honolulu and Fay Coleman of Los Angeles won their thirty-six-hole semifinal matches today to become finalists in the California amateur championship. They will meet tomorrow over the thirty-six-hole route for the title.

"COMPACT" COURSE TO BE OPENED

New Game Said to Offer Opportunity for Owners of Larger Lots

Opening the 13th or [illegible] of the first Rolfe Golfette courses in California, at Santa Anita Boulevard and Orange avenue, [illegible] was announced yesterday by [illegible] Jones, manager. The game, [illegible] is the invention of Charles A. [illegible] formerly president of the [illegible] Western Home Telephone Co. [illegible] of Redlands and president of [illegible] California Independent Telephone [illegible] Association, is said to require [illegible] "real golf compactness."

The game is played with a [illegible] cial light-weight ball, which [illegible] be driven only about 150 feet [illegible] a full swing of the specially [illegible] used. The club is adjustable [illegible] any shot, driving, approach, or [illegible] ting. The game is said to offer a [illegible] opportunity for the owner of [illegible] vacant lots of half a block or more. The architect and designer of the Arcadia course is Hubert [illegible] who is now building the regulation course at Ensenada, Mex. The Arcadia course is nine holes, with total distances of 1281 feet from tee to cups, and fairways twenty-[illegible] fifty feet wide.

BELL CONQUERS BOROTRA

Gallic Texan Crushes French Ace in Four Hard Fought Sets to Open National Championship

FOREST HILLS (N. Y.) Sept. 6. (AP)—They did not "seed" our Wilmer Bell. They tossed him into the thick of the fight without [illegible] of "seeding" and this afternoon, in one of the greatest first-round matches ever seen in a national tennis championship tournament the [illegible] Texan proved it was all a mistake by beating the great Jean [illegible] of France, 2-6, 6-2, 12-10, 7-5.

JEAN BOROTRA

This slender, 22-year-old kid from [illegible] was not considered good [illegible] by the tournament committee [illegible] in the [illegible] of twelve [illegible] selected for favorites in the draw but in [illegible] today [illegible] nobody's [illegible] of the [illegible] who [illegible] Yankee [illegible] the [illegible] under [illegible] left no [illegible] the enthusiastic gallery of [illegible] to say he was ranked ninth [illegible] the players of the nation [illegible] and how he was able to [illegible] Borotra to five sets at [illegible] this summer.

Bell, trained shabbily by [illegible] during the dangerous [illegible] for no opening opponent while other favorites faced comparative push-overs, battled with all the strength in his slender, graceful frame and all the courage of his justly famous fighting heart, but Bell had ten years more of youth on his side of the net and he prevailed.

BASQUE NEAR END

The downfall of the great Frenchman in the very first round of the forty-ninth annual singles championship cost the tournament one of its greatest drawing cards and probably meant Borotra never will achieve his ambition of winning the American title, the one great national crown which has eluded his rapier racket. The Basque, now 32 years of age, says he is nearing the end of his international career.

Outside of the elimination of Borotra, the No. 1 seeded player among the foreign contestants, the day's play provided few surprises, as is usually the case.

GALLANT FOX CAPTURES LAWRENCE REALIZATION TO HEAD MONEY WINNERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Gallant Fox became the all-time money winning turf champion today, capturing the Lawrence Realization and $29,610 at Belmont Park to bring his grand total to $317,865.

GALLANT FOX

James Butler's Questionnaire, pace setter until the field of four hit the stretch, was only a head back of the three-year-old champion, with A. C. Bostwick's Yarn third.

In climbing to the turf's financial heights and passing Zev's record of $313,639, the Fox, with Earl Sande up, covered the mile and five furlongs in 2:41 1-5, only two-fifths of a second slower than Man o' War's track record. Gallant Fox was forced to the limit, however, to nose out Questionnaire, who set a burning pace from the rise of the barrier. From the head of the stretch to the final stride, the two colts raced side by side, but in the end it was Sande's brilliant riding that fairly lifted the big red colt over the line.

Although beaten in the Travers by a long shot, the Fox went to the post the odds-on favorite with plenty of money riding on Questionnaire. Yarn was the rank outsider in the wagering, while William Ziegler, Jr.'s Spinach, which finished fourth and last, was held a long shot.

Questionnaire apparently had the race won coming into the stretch, but Workman weakened in his ride as Sande went to the whip on the Fox. After trailing for two lengths most of the journey, the champion closed fast, but had to give his best to beat off Questionnaire, who hung on like a leech.

RULER IS VICTOR IN STEEPLECHASE

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—Ruler, a consistent 6-year-old gelding from the Fox-Catcher farm, was given a beautiful ride by Pete Bostwick, member of the United States polo squad, to win the Brook Steeplechase Handicap, the opening feature of today's card at Belmont Park. Joseph E. Widener's Arc Light closed fast to take second with the Brookmeade stable's Rooney third. The race carried a purse of $11,600, and $250 purse to the winner, which was the choice at 3 to 1.

MISS PALFREY WINS AGAIN

Defeats Helen Marlowe to Annex National Girl's Championship for Third Consecutive Year

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6. (AP)—Miss Sarah Palfrey, of Brookline, Mass., today won the girls national lawn tennis championship for the third straight year, defeating Helen Marlowe, of Los Angeles, by the scores of 10-8, 5-7, 6-1. It was the second straight year the California girl was runner-up to the champion.

It was the first time during the thirteen years of the tourney that a junior has won the girls' title three times.

HELEN MARLOWE

The match, played on the grass courts of the Philadelphia Cricket Club, was the longest and one of the hardest-fought finals seen in the girls' competition.

Both winner and loser played in national junior competition for the last time. Miss Marlowe, who will be a sophomore at the University of Southern California next month and is the United States hard-court title holder, played a fine match against the New England girl.

In winning the title again, Miss Palfrey showed superior experience and more stamina. She was a member of the American Wightman Cup team that competed in the international matches in England this summer.

Helen Marlowe and her sister, Mercedes won the girls' doubles championship yesterday.

In today's final round Miss Marlowe, who ordinarily plays a hard, smashing game, resorted to a softer brand of play and ran up a 5-to-1 lead on Miss Palfrey in the first set. Both girls for a while played baseline, driving the ball so it dropped just over the inside.

Stanford Given Slight Edge Over California and S. C. in 1930 Coast Football Ra

BEARS AND TROJANS DUE FOR BIG GRID SEASON

Easy Schedule May Leave Oregon Undefeated; Teams to Report One Week from Tomorrow

BY BRAVEN DYER

Chafing at the bit and anxious to be off, teams of the Pacific Coast Conference have only one more week to wait for the start of a new football season. One week from tomorrow the barrier goes up and close to 1600 red-blooded grid candidates will dash into action that will continue right on into December.

CAPT. CARL HANDY.

And what a race it should be! Material has never been so plentiful. Each of the leading contenders is well supplied with returning veterans and the reserve list at each institution is long enough to satisfy even the most exacting of coaches. There have been few injuries and there as it should be for the rivals seem to be very evenly matched at the outset.

Stanford, California and Southern California appear to be the class of the pack again, with Oregon and Washington State bound to be dangerous. The Whitefords, because of a cinch schedule, ought to be roundly scored if they don't finish the season without a contentious defeat.

PASS UP "BIG THREE"

"Doc" Spears, new Oregon mentor, plays only four conference games and this list includes neither California, Stanford nor S.C. The big game of the Oregon program is that with Washington on October 18 and if Spears gets over that he should dispose of Idaho, U.C.L.A. and Oregon State and thus finish without a blemish on his conference escutcheon.

Of course, on the face of that schedule, Oregon's claims to the championship will not be given much of a tumble. And rightly so.

Although there is little to choose between California's "Big Three" I have a slight leaning toward Stanford for two reasons. In the first place, the law of averages practically calls for a Stanford win over Southern California and the Trojans are undoubtedly Stanford's toughest hurdle. Pop Warner has five defeats and a tie in his three last years of endeavor against S.C. and it looks as if something better might be in store for the Old Man this time. He has working material which includes a bunch of youngsters who have already displayed enough ability to rank them as coming stars.

Pop has a wealth of backfield material including Harlow Rothert, Phil Moffatt, Guido Caglieri, Harry Hillman and Phil Winnek, who have been tried and found very acceptable. He has one fine end in Phil Nott and good guards in Heiser and Bardin. Perry Taylor at center has been understudying Heinecke two years and ought to know what it is all about. Artman returns for one tackle and the other is Capt. Ray Tandy, who showed to advantage in closing games. This chap George Grey of the Grays is said to be the boy to watch for he is billed as the coming star of the Coast at tackle.

California, according to every report emanating from Berkeley, is better fixed than at any time since Nibs Price took the helm, and this despite the loss of Lom, Bland and Riegels. Price had some corking fresh backs last year, but whether they will receive much of a play this season remains to be seen what with the veterans Gill, Griffiths, Hickingbotham and Gerrity ready for the fray.

On the line Price has nothing to worry about. Avery and Thornton are back for the ends, Timmerman and Cahn are available for tackles and Capt. Handy and Beckett are tried and proven guards. Herman Eickmeyer at center is experienced and fast.

At Bovard Field Howard Jones has a so-called second-string line which at nearly all times last year was superior to the varsity on offensive. This includes Arbelbide and Wilcox as ends, Hall at one tackle, Williamson at center and Baker at one guard. The dope is that Tay Brown of the frosh will handle the other tackle berth and that either Jesse Shaw, a veteran, or Rupert Black of the frosh will play along with Baker. That line will be a good one.

PLENTY OF BACKS

As for backs Jones has plenty. Duffield, Musick, Pinckert and Apsit are as good as regulars. Backing them up properly will be Jones's immediate problem, but from Gaius Shaver, Orv Mohler, Harold Hamblack, Nathan Kates, George Kirkwood, Howard Tipton and Blanchard Beatty the Trojan mentor ought to be able to work out a pretty fair reserve group.

Off-hand Shaver, who is practically a regular, inasmuch as he will play full when Mohler is in at quarter, Mohler, Kirkwood and Tipton look like the most promising of the lot. The latter two are up from the frosh, big strong fellows, who can stand a battering.

There is naturally much speculation as to what Jones will do with Pinckert. The Trojan mentor needs more power at quarter than Duffield and Mohler will be able to supply. But he can't shift Pinckert until he's sure that Kirkwood or somebody else can fill the bill correctly at right halfback. Until Jones is positive that his right halfback position is adequately filled you will not see Pinckert at quarter.

As for Washington State there is bound to be something doing when the Trojans bump into this outfit at Fullman on October 11. Coach Babe Hollingbery has "The" veteran team of the circuit, with eight regulars available from last year. When you recall that the score here last season was 7 to 7 at the end of the half, you can readily see that the Trojans will have to be at their best when they invade the lair of the Cougars next month.

Washington State, under Hollingbery, has never been defeated on the Pullman field. In addition, until last year when California unexpectedly, but convincingly upset Troy's applecart, the Cougars were the only Coast team other than Stanford to hold a decision over Jones. That was accomplished in 1925 under the regime of A. A. Exendine.

TOUGH SCHEDULE

I look for Washington State to be very tough, but due to the fact that Hollingbery bars no team from his schedule, the Cougars will hardly finish at the top. Washington State plays California the week before meeting our Trojans and that's one good break for Jones, who will also have a tough game that day—Oregon State.

It will be recalled that the Cougars, although defeated by California on two passes last year, outplained the Bears and made Price's line backwater repeatedly.

As for the other teams, they'll undoubtedly be also-rans. Jimmy Phelan may surprise at Washington, but it isn't likely. Phelan has one of the best backs on the Coast in Merle Hufford, a go-getter if ever there was one, but one man doesn't make a football team and there is considerable speculation as to how the Notre [illegible] somewhat dumpish Northwest.

WARNER READY TO START WORK

PALO ALTO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Coach Pop Warner of Stanford arrived from the East today to take charge of Stanford University's football training, which begins the 15th inst.

Warner said [illegible] were somewhat poorer this season because eight regulars graduated and he will have to whip new men into shape in time for the first game with the West Coast Army team the 30th inst.

Warner conducted four coaching schools during the summer. He said about 600 coaches attended the classes.

BELL DEFEATS JEAN BOROTRA

leading contenders are prevented by the "seeding" from meeting until the later rounds, the favorites generally advanced without difficulty.

Big Bill Tilden in quest of his eighth national singles title, won as he pleased from C. Lincoln Halberstadt, a comparatively obscure New York player, 6-1, 6-0, 6-4.

VINES, WOOD WIN

Sidney B. Wood, the New York youngster whom Tilden regards as the best prospect of the rising generation, smothered Weller B. Evans of East Orange, N. J., 6-1, 6-2, 6-0.

Ellsworth Vines of Pasadena, Cal., Bryan Grant of Atlanta and Clifford Sutter of New Orleans, three more young men whose prospects for future greatness are regarded highly, eased through with first-round victories, but Sutter, playing poorly, narrowly escaped elimination.

Arrayed against Arthur W. MacPherson of New York, a player of no national reputation, Sutter was forced to go five sets before he finally won by scores of 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, 2-6, 6-1. The Tulane University player who won the intercollegiate championship of the United States last June was sadly lacking in control and will need to be back in form on Monday when he meets Emmette Pare of Dayton O., former national clay-court title-holder.

Grant's victory was gained over Cedric Major, New York 6-1, 7-5, 10-8, while Vines downed Ralph M. Demott of Atlanta, 6-3, 7-5, 6-3.

ENGLISHMAN LOSES

The only other player on the American seeded list to see action was John Van Ryn of East Orange, N. J. Davis Cup doubles player, who eliminated the formidable Arnold Jones of Providence, R. I., in decisive style, 6-0, 6-2, 6-2. The other leading Americans such as Wilmer Allison, George Lott, John Doeg, Gregory Mangin, Frank Hunter and Frank Shields will not see action until Monday, having drawn byes in the first round.

In addition to losing Borotra, the foreign seeded list suffered a minor dent when L. A. Godfree, veteran captain of the English contingent, was put out by Arthur S. Fowler of Pleasantville, N. Y., the man who upset Frank Shields about three weeks ago.

Babe, Lanai Annex Races

With Owen Churchill at the stick the eight-meter sloop Babe defeated Vic Dalton's Marin in a heated race off the harbor yesterday in the first of a series of four weekend races sponsored by the California Yacht Club. Churchill recently returned from the East and it was his first race.

Al Christie's Lanai, skippered by Ted Conant, defeated Tommy Lee's Caprice in the six-meter class. It was a nip-and-tuck race to the line with the Lanai just nosing out the Caprice at the tape. Lee was at the Caprice's stick. The second race of the series will be sailed tomorrow.

PIGSKIN PERSONALITIES OF COMING COAST SEASON

Two big league grid coaches, Doc Spears and Jimmy Phelan, join the far western circuit this fall. Spears heads the Oregon staff while Phelan is in charge at the University of Washington. The players shown here are big guns of their respective teams. Tandy leads the Stanford contingent while Solomon is skipper of the U.C.L.A. Bruins. Hufford will no doubt be one of the Coast's greatest ball carriers, while Duffield ranks in the same class. Simkins is billed for the fullback berth at Stanford and that means a lot of pigskin labor.

McDonald Sure to Meet Hess

Goldie Hess and Hector McDonald will positively fight the main event at the Hollywood American Legion Stadium Friday night. Three times a date has been set for this bout, but Hess has always found a way to force a postponement. Admirers of McDonald claim that Hess doesn't care much about meeting the Canadian lightweight and would welcome a way to get out of the match.

In the semi-wind-up Sammy Santos fights Don Burchard. They are lightweights.

A great fight should be the special event featuring Jimmy Mack and Sergio Radara, bantamweights. Mack won a fight at Hollywood two weeks ago in less than a round and looked great. Radaza is a Filipino.

The four-rounders will be Bob Patrick and Joe Flores in the second spot and Julie Zuniga and Palo Mendoza, bantamweights, in the curtain-raiser.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

At the Olympic Auditorium next Tuesday night the little fellows get another inning in the forms of Chatto Laredo and Newsboy Brown. Laredo is the pride of Mexico, having won the Mexican championship of that country from Pedro Urquidez in a hotly contested battle. He has since met some of the toughest boxers on the Coast and has always proved himself a formidable opponent. He holds a decision over Speedy Dado, and the general opinion is that he will prove a worthy antagonist for Brownie. The sensational Brown is now at the peak of his career and is loved, upon by many of his admirers as the coming champion. He made fast work of Midget Wolgast not long ago at the Olympic Auditorium after the Midget had installed himself as a prime favorite with local ringsiders by several outstanding victories in Los Angeles rings.

The rank and file of mitt fans sort of lean to Brown as the likely winner, and he will undoubtedly enter the ring as a prime favorite—still one can never tell. Boxing lovers should remember that the Olympic is subject to more surprises parties than any other athletic arena in Southern California. Both boys are training faithfully at the Main-street Athletic Club, and latest reports have it that Chatto is in prime fettle—so nothing remains but the old-time slogan of Billy Cox, let's go.

The railbirds at the various camps have dubbed Fred Winner "President of the Purity Squad." Freddie, however, casts a merry eye at his new honors and cuts loose as follows, in regard to mending the Marquis of Queensbury code in California: "There is no doubt that the boxing industry in California is always mended nicely, and that Doman is fit and ready for devastating ring work very soon and then some. If he ever lands that destroy pile driver on Master Morro's coco it should be an instant urge for Jeffries to hike back to the ranch and don that old solace of "it might have been."

Whispering winds around the various training camps have it that Frank Churchill is not using a kindly eye on Jackie Fields. Jackie is itching to get back into the traces again, but the wiseacres hint that Churchill has molded scrap or two before attaining that condition when he was sitting nicely in Mother Earth's lookout chair about a year or so ago.

Gossip will not down about the cashiering of radio boxing announcers. Old Cauliflower used to listen once in a while when the triple-tongued shouters were in the highest pitch of their frenzy. It seemed to him that all they had their heart set on was the churning out of the largest number of words in three minutes that could possibly slip over their tonsils, and if they didn't have tonsils, over the epiglottis. The funniest part of the whole business was the dyed-in-the-mite and sudden stressing of imaginary blows that almost blasted the radio to pieces. This shot the listener-ins onto the top of their chairs, jarring them into maniacal bursts of enthusiasm. On these garrulous nights of radioland many homes were turned into a humpty-dumpty session of pandemonium. The best way for fatians to rid itself of these chop-suey blurbs is to shoot 'em down to the one-eighth tempo resorted to at times in the moving pictures, and then have the microphone wires connected with the deepest bosom of old ocean.

The Main Street Athletic Club's marathon chair sitters look upon Dave Landerman as the best training camp manager in Bonneville Canada. Dave has to slant his jambs on three rings on the big beer and this sure keeps him busy. Dave has a suave way of smoothing out kicks and complaints, and his general fairness has endeared him to Carlo Curtis's vast army of hubs from over the Rio Grande (Los Angeles street.)

Cauliflower Alley's old mug takes on horizontal wrinkles every time Gentleman Jeems Corbett gets about his years of elder down with John L. Sullivan. He is reputed to have said that he got the old Boston strong boy's goat a little before entering the ring by walking down the aisle tossed up like a dude. Well, Cousin Mary, things to happen in this world. One can easily guess that if the truth were known the old grizzled warrior was worrying about his sad belly more than anything else. He entered the ring looking like a Holstein prize bull.

It bodies up very much like a Villa Donega—Al Morris, Sr., emphatically at Tom Gallery's dear old stadium, in a few weeks. Manager O'Grady declares that his battering ram's right mauler has mended nicely, and that Doman is fit and ready for devastating ring work very soon and then some. If he ever lands that destroy pile driver on Master Morro's coco it should be an instant urge for Jeffries to hike back to the ranch and don that old solace of "it might have been."

Joe Rivers, in a fanning bee at the Main Street Athletic Club last Monday afternoon, in regard to getting into boxing condition, let those the following: "These guys make me sick about having to go awful time of it to take off weight. I seldom weighed over 128 pounds when I fought Kid Chocolate my usually five or six days after a fight I climbed the scales 136 pounds. When I got ready for a fight I took to road work, which is a great thing to season up the wind, and in the course of a week or so I has little trouble in taking off twenty-two pounds. The road work is what the battlers are afraid of. They are up to Westlake Park and run around it several times and call it a day. If they lose off weight [illegible] they would think they were going to die."

Dick Donald declares that Phil Salvadore could take off weight quicker than any other pugilist he ever knew. When Dick managed him Phil found it difficult when put to it, to remove three or four pounds at quick notice. Then Donald resorted to strategy. It seems that Salvadore was a certain pitch slayer, and like all poor pitch fiends he thought he was a crackerjack. Dick found means to scrub up a pitch tilt and usually managed to stop the game when the fighter was about three bucks in the hole. Invariably it happened that Phillo, old scout, lost at least three pounds at the sitting, and it looked very much as if he dropped a pound with each buck.

Whittier, Sept. 6.—Football at the Whittier College will get under way in about ten days.

Coaches Trine, Cunningham and Cushman are all back from their vacations and are ready to begin work with the men who will be called out the 15th inst.

The varsity squad should show more strength this year than last. The two Bedens, Hank and Pete, are back and will be playing.

Hank was here last year but Pete was out of school and missed from the backfield. Boone in the line and Fox, backfield, will probably not be in school but Hilton Hall will be back also Smith, Hall, Anger and Toombs in the line, Flanagan and Sorrels.

Considerable strength will come from the freshman team of last year, including Delcarlo, who should make a sweet end; Joe Rabun, who is a great athlete; Hales, a heavy lineman; Manuel Villegas in the backfield; Holliday, who is a sweet backfield man; Murray, Wanless and Massey.

POET OUTLOOK BRIGHT

Whittier Football Hopes for 1930 Strong as Veterans Return for Practice

BY IRVING ECKHOFF

"They will go through us again this year but not so far." That's the way Wallace (Chief) Newman of the Whittier Poets summarizes the Poet football hopes for the coming season in the Southern California Conference.

Much heavier and visibly showing the effects of Newman's building-up process, the Poets are sure to be a major threat in the conference race this season.

CHIEF NEWMAN

Eleven of last year's squad are returning to the Poet fold as well as some nine or ten very promising freshmen, three ineligibles and possibly a couple of usable junior college transfers.

Capt. Cecil Baker tops the list of returning veterans. The others are as follows: Brad Jones, Frank Jones and Mark Martin, ends; Leo Davidson and Capt. Baker, tackles; Harry Brown, guard; Sherman Reynolds, center and Clair Jobe, Whitey Edwards, Cliff Grain, Peter Pendleton and Nate George, backs.

Newman plans two changes in the above list, Martin going over to the center job while Capt. Baker is slated for one of the guard positions.

The freshmen hopes, who are now sophomores are Ben Allen, Muric Mashburn, backfield men; Bobby Grunsky and Kenny Goodge, ends; Bob Gibbs, Herschy Daugherty and Vince Sinatra, tackles; Bill Duncan, center and Bryon Netley, guard, and the two Bonner brothers, Bill and Ellison. Bill is a guard, while Ellison played half last season.

Of that number, Mashburn, Grunsky, Gibbs and Duncan are thought to be strong threats for varsity positions.

The trio of ineligibles who are scheduled to appear in uniform are Bill Mifflin, Harry Hill and Bill Krieger. Mifflin dropped out of school a while back but returned last fall and is now okay. Hill and Krieger were both ineligible freshmen last year.

Hill played at Whittier High, while Krieger hails from Huntington Park, where he was a sprinter on the Spartan track team. Although not possessing any grid experience, Newman believes that Krieger will prove his worth.

Undoubtedly the Poets have gone ahead under Newman and with all the improvements being made on the Whittier campus will make still greater strides.

Huge arc lights have been installed on the Poet field and night football will be a weekly dish for the local townsfolk. The stands have also been enlarged and can now accommodate 7000 fans.

The rebuilt stadium and the lights will make their football debut the 27th inst., with the sailors from the U.S.S. Oklahoma furnishing the opposition for the Poets.

SARAH PALFREY RETAINS TITLE

Miss Palfrey rallied in the middle of the set, hit her stride and began placing the ball in the corners. From then on the score seesawed until the sixteenth game when the champion took three in a row.

Miss Palfrey played less confidently in the second set. The western girl seemed to have command of the situation and alternated her play with hard drives and soft shots. Miss Marlowe then forged ahead, the champion winning only 2 points in the last two games.

The third set was soon over, the California girl, apparently very tired, winning but one game. Summary:

First set:
Miss Marlowe	341	444	202	246	004	183—56

Hinkley Seeks Ascot Laurels

At the helm of a former "outlaw racing car," "Speed" Hinkley, the veteran Pasadena speed king and father of three youngsters, figures to finally work himself up to a place of prominence in the speedway world. Hinkley, who will be among the thirty drivers risking life and limb for several thousand dollars' prize money at the Legion Ascot Speedway next Wednesday night, has been thumping a throttle in dirt-track competition for several years, but hard luck has crowned his efforts more often than anything else.

Last season, "Speed" was involved in some bad smash-ups at El Centro, Phoenix, and at the Legion track. But none of the narrow escapes from death served to discourage the Crown City ace. He proceeded to drive in following events with such added zest and recklessness that E. B. Jackson two weeks ago signed him to drive No. 2, the Jackson Special.

Inasmuch as Jackson has not been mixed up in the racing game hereabouts for some time, local fans did not take any special interest in the announcement that he would enter No. 2 at the local track. But when it was revealed that No. 2 was the erstwhile Barney Special, one of the fastest mounts in the Southwest, the critics realized that Hinkley and the car were going to make things hot for the favorites at the local five-eighths-of-a-mile saucer. The Barney Special was a consistent contender for laurels at Ascot throughout last winter and spring when competition was keen.

Billboard Ban Beauty Boost

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The Sixth International Road Congress, to be held in Washington, October 6 to 11, will be urged to take a definite position against billboards as a means of highway beautification in line with the programs already in force in France and England.

The French government has adopted a sliding scale of taxation in order to curb billboards, ranging from $24 a year for small boards, $400 for those of the twenty-four-sheet size, and up to as high as $16,000 a year for the largest.

AIR CLUB OPENING SATURDAY

Program Augmented by Sports Events and Ball in Evening

The dedication and opening of the Flying Club of California, which is scheduled for Saturday, will be one of the outstanding aviation gatherings of the year, according to Victor M. Clark, secretary and manager. At least twelve of the most prominent pilots appearing at the annual spectacle have signified their intention of participating in the club's opening upon their return to California, according to word received here.

Aside from the air events during the full day's program, a number of sports exhibitions have been planned. A tuning model flying contest for trophies will also be held during the afternoon of the opening.

The evening buffet supper and ball for members and their guests completes the day's program.

The Flying Club of California is situated adjoining the Grand Central Air Terminal in Glendale.

Landing Shock Reduced with New Invention

A new and revolutionary development in aviation equipment that enhances the safety and comfort of airplane pilots and passengers is a pneumatic strut landing gear invented by Peter W. Kane, a mechanical engineer of San Francisco. The device, which prevents rebound action, not only produces an effect of taxi-ing upon air cushions when the plane comes in contact with the ground, but engineers claim that it will reduce the danger in forced landings or those upon rough terrain to the minimum.

The Kane unit consists of a cylinder of alloy steel tubing, containing a series of three or more pistons, compression chambers and cylinder heads. When the airplane wheels strike the ground in landing, the pistons in the device are forced toward the cylinder heads, compressing the air in the chambers. Automatic pop-off relief valves in each compression chamber operate instantaneously when pressure has been raised to an amount sufficient to absorb the landing shocks, the relief vent at the bottom of each cylinder causes the landing gear to return automatically to normal position when the plane's wheels leave the ground in a take-off. From one to three of these pneumatic shock absorbers are used on each wheel, according to the weight of the plane, and one is used on the tail skid.

During recent tests of this device at local air terminals, one pilot flew his plane to the ground at high speed from a height of thirty feet and then without stopping made several normal landings, while another made pancake landings at stalled speeds from fifteen feet.

White Lines Divide Wide Boulevard into Efficient Lanes

Greater Flow of Traffic Permitted on Wilshire

Speed is attained in travel over California's most famous and busy boulevard through the use of lanes, created by used of paint. Above, showing how the cars naturally follow the lanes, permitting travel without interference by other cars. Below, City Traffic Engineer Ralph Dorsey directing the application of the paint.

WIDENING, TRAFFIC LANES TO INCREASE AUTO FLOW

Wide Band of Highway will Permit Speedy Travel from Heart of City to Edge of Pacific

The new traffic lanes now being marked off on Wilshire Boulevard by a series of white lines are expected to accomplish the two-fold purpose of promoting safety for the motorists and increasing the carrying capacity of the thoroughfare, in the opinion of R. T. Dorsey, recently appointed traffic engineer for the city of Los Angeles.

As Wilshire has been established as the busiest street in the world by checks in comparison with other points and has a 2700-car per hour traffic as against the 2200-car per hour traffic peak on Fifth avenue, New York, this improvement is felt to be of the utmost importance to the traffic conditions of the city. It is estimated that the traffic will be speeded up 25 per cent by the use of these lanes, as they have proved in use in other parts of the city and county, and where they have permitted higher average speeds, reduced spurts of speed, and lessened hazards.

WHITE PAINTED LINES

The lanes are marked with a twelve-inch center line and a six-inch guide line, along the entire distance of Wilshire Boulevard from Westlake Park to the eastern limits of Beverly Hills and from the western limits of that city to Soldiers' Home near the Santa Monica line. In the city limits of Beverly Hills permanent lanes have been marked off by the use of concrete that shows through the black surface covering of asphaltic cement.

"New developments in methods of application of traffic lacquers, perfected by McEveriast, Inc., Los Angeles manufacturers, has greatly reduced the cost of this work," Mr. Dorsey states, "thus permitting us to do it on a large scale with a small appropriation."

COUNT FOR YEAR

The fact that Wilshire last year carried 27,000,000 cars over the Western-avenue intersection, almost doubling the 15,000,000 cars of the Holland tube between New York and New Jersey (the nearest rival) has, it is said, focused attention on this great east and west traffic artery, and caused the Council to take one more great step this week in making it a through boulevard from the heart of Los Angeles to the sea at the Santa Monica Palisades.

AWARDS GRANTED

Fourteen awards, totaling $2,375,041, were signed by Superior Judge Bowron, ending condemnation proceedings for the opening of Wilshire from Figueroa street to Grand avenue with record promptness. The awards for the land parcels totaled $2,066,968 and for improvements $308,073. The new extension from Figueroa to Grand will be eighty feet wide.

The extended Wilshire Boulevard will start at Figueroa street and will intersect Lebanon street, Flower street and Hope street, ending at Grand avenue. Though handled separately, this project is part of the larger plan comprehending the widening of Wilshire from Figueroa to Alvarado street, where the new thoroughfare will be connected with the existing Wilshire Boulevard by a bridge over Westlake Park.

Appropriation Request Filed for Road Work

VISALIA, Sept. 7. (Exclusive)—Agreement having been reached by all parties concerned in the completion of the General's Highway between Gen. Grant and Sequoia national parks, request for an immediate appropriation of $200,000 for next year's work outside the national park boundaries has been filed with the Bureau of Public Roads.

Should the appropriation be granted, in addition to the money already available and being spent inside Sequoia National Park, it probably would mean use of the greater part of the new interstate road two years hence.

CLUB GIVES SURVEY OF ACCIDENTS

Ignorance and Traffic Violations Chief Causes of Auto Crashes

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) If you're going to have an accident with your car, chances are one in three it will be caused either by ignorance or violation of right of way. However, the most serious type of automobile accident is running off the roadway.

Such, at least, are among the leading concerns of an analysis of the causes of 100,000 automobile accidents occurring in 1929 as made public today by Owen B. Augspurger, president of the New York Automobile Club. The following table tells the story:

Cause of accident—	Odds on accident.	Odds on fatality
Right of way	1 to 3	1 to 14
Speeding	1 to 5	1 to 24
Wrong side road	1 to 7	1 to 31
Passing on grade	1 to 10	1 to 32
Failing to signal	1 to 10	1 to 60
Cutting in	1 to 13	1 to 42
Following too closely	1 to 20	1 to 25
Passing at curves	1 to 50	1 to 15
Passing wrong side	1 to 90	1 to 34
Passing standing street car		1 to 46
Other	1 to 64	1 to 46

The study showed that the road hog causes many accidents and the report urged a return to "the good old-fashioned road courtesy that existed in the days of the horse and buggy."

Chevrolet Has New Light Duty Truck Offering

The Chevrolet Motor Company last week introduced a new one and one-half-ton truck, it is announced by W. M. Packer, zone manager in Los Angeles for Chevrolet. With production in full swing on the new type, dealers throughout the country are being rapidly stocked with the new model.

Highlights of the new type include dual wheels as optional equipment; heavier rear axle; new pressed-steel wheels interchangeable front and rear; new one-piece steel channel frame, and internal expanding brakes on all four wheels.

The new truck lists at $630, f.o.b. Flint, Mich., while dual wheels, including six truck-type cord tires, are $25 extra. The new chassis is built complete with cab, and affiliations with body manufacturers enable the purchaser to choose the exact type of body for the work to be done from thirty-six different types.

Deer Hunters May Park Cars on Mountain

LINDSAY, Sept. 7. (Exclusive)—Deer hunters seeking trophies on the first summit of the high Sierra back of Camp Nelson this year, will be able to park their cars as far in as Quaking Asp Meadow, that point having been reached recently by the big steam shovel cutting out the high mountain road to the ridge above Camp Nelson.

Construction of the new road has been under way for two seasons, it being the second leg of the trans-Sierra highway that is to be built, in time, to Carrol Creek on the Inyo side of the mountains.

The graders and the brushing crews follow close behind the big shovel, and the road will be in fair shape, although a bit rough over the last mile or so, when deer season opens the 16th inst.

CANADA WORKING ON ROAD

Engineering Party Makes Topographical Survey of Proposed International Highway

British Columbia is pressing vigorously its development of the great International Pacific Highway project, according to word brought personally by Maj. J. Gordon Smith, director of the department of information for the Canadian province, who recently was a visitor at the headquarters of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

An engineering air party is making a topographical survey from Hazleton north to the Alaskan boundary, a distance of approximately 900 miles, which will complete British Columbia's portion of the international road through its territory, J. H. Gray, British Columbia's land surveyor, is in the field with parties of surveyors looking for the most scenic and economic route for the proposed road.

Investigation has disclosed that although magnificent scenery will be developed for motor tourists, it is also a sound economic background for building through this hitherto inaccessible region. Recently lead, copper, silver and gold deposits have been found and are being developed and highway transportation will be needed.

It is also planned to have the road act as a feeder for the deep inlets that indent the northern portion of British Columbia. It has also been discovered that the building of the highway north from Hazelton to the Alaskan border will be easier from an engineering standpoint than the southern portion of the international highway in Canada.

The visit of Maj. Smith in Southern California is a direct outgrowth of the international caravan several months ago into British Columbia which was made by representatives of the Automobile Club of Southern California, which organization has been working steadily and insistently on the great project of a highway from Alaska in the north down the west coast of North and South America and across to Buenos Aires.

This caravan penetrated to the present northernmost point of the highway through British Columbia, which is at Hazleton, 839 miles north of Vancouver. Hazelton is a typical frontier town. It is 500 miles south of the Yukon, which is a territory of Canada.

It is believed that the reports of activity on the great highway now going on in British Columbia will have a stimulating influence on the conference of governors and engineers of the west coast States of Mexico which will be held in Los Angeles some time in October. At that time reports will be made from various sections of the proposed highway in North America and a more or less definite idea will be had of the mileages to be built before Alaska and the southernmost end of Mexico will be connected by a single highway.

WHIPPET PRICES LOWERED

What is declared to be the greatest price reduction ever made on a current model by Willys-Overland, is announced for the Superior Whippet six by R. L. Butler, vice-president and manager of Willys Distributors, Inc., distributor.

Some body types have been reduced as much as 28 per cent below former delivered, equipped prices which brings the six-cylinder standard four-door sedan below the price of any four-cylinder car of the same body type made by any other manufacturer, he explained.

This price reduction affects the standard sedan, de luxe sedan with wire wheels, four-passenger sport roadster with six wire wheels, business coupe, four-passenger coupe and two-door sedan, it is stated.

HAZARDS AT CROSSINGS EXPLAINED

Right of Way Section of Motor Vehicle Act Made Clear

So many arguments arise between motorists over the right-of-way provisions in the State Motor Vehicle Act that the legal department of the Automobile Club of Southern California has compiled the following summary for the information of motorists:

"When approaching an intersection the driver of the vehicle must yield the right of way to another vehicle which has already entered the intersection. If two vehicles enter an intersection at the same time, the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield the right of way to the driver on the right.

"When approaching an intersection, intending to turn left, you should yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to present an immediate hazard. When you have permitted this vehicle to pass and after having given the proper signal you may then proceed to make your left turn and other vehicles approaching the intersection from the opposite direction shall yield to the driver making the left turn.

"When approaching a street or highway marked by arterial or boulevard stop signs you must bring your automobile to a complete stop. You shall then yield the right of way to other vehicles within the intersection or approaching so closely from the left as to present an immediate hazard. After having so yielded, however, you may proceed across the boulevard and all other vehicles approaching the intersection from the left or right shall yield to the vehicle proceeding across.

"When entering a public highway from a private road or drive, you shall yield the right of way to all vehicles approaching on the public highway."

Newly Offered Sedans Provide Greater Space

In order to comply with the preference of many motorists for closed cars with an especially roomy rear compartment, the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation has produced new body types for the 134-inch wheelbase Graham special eight chassis. These are in both five and seven-passenger models, the first shipment of which was received a few days ago by the Graham-Paige Company of Southern California.

The length of the rear compartment in the new Grahams is thirty-six and one-quarter inches. This measurement is from the front of the rear seat cushion to the back of the front seat. The interior is upholstered in broadcloth with mohair optional and a Moresque velvet carpet covers the floor of the rear compartment.

The front seat is anchored to the body pillars, thus affording additional strength and finer appearance of the interior. Adjustments are easy to make without the occupants being disturbed by means of a crank located beneath the front edge of the seat cushions. Foot pedals and steering column are both adjustable to meet the convenience of the driver.

These sedans are furnished throughout with shatter-proof safety plate glass, which prevents pieces of glass breaking loose and endangering passengers in case of collision or accident.

CITY SALES RANK SECOND

Los Angeles ranks second in the twenty-five major cities of the United States as a wholesale selling point for automotive equipment. This information is made public through Neal G. Adair, managing editor of Motor, in a survey that he has just completed. These cities handled 41 per cent of all the wholesaling in this line for the nation, Chicago leads with 4.55 per cent of the national business, Los Angeles had 3.15 per cent, New York 2.76 per cent, Detroit 2.87 per cent, and San Francisco was thirteenth with 1.46 per cent.

California, as a State, ranked fourth in number of cities with wholesale accounts (with fifty-two such cities) and fourth in percentage of national volume with 6.66 per cent. New York State led with seventy-four cities and 10.19 per cent; Pennsylvania second with ninety-nine cities and 7.39 per cent, and third place in percentage went to Illinois with 6.74 per cent, while Ohio tied with Pennsylvania with ninety-nine cities, although taking fifth place otherwise.

REO

Reo Motor Car Company was founded in 1904 by a group of men who believed that by an honest product; by adherence to sound policies; by fairness alike to their customers, to their sources of supply and to their workmen, they could build an enduring confidence in their business.

Paralleling for 26 years the fastest growing industry in our knowledge, they have created an institution commanding widespread confidence for stability and sterling quality.

Through all these years the business they built has thrived without a single reorganization.

Starting with the fall term, the safety teaching in all schools of the State will be amplified as provided by an enactment of the last Legislature. A manual of safety for secondary schools has been prepared by E. B. Lefferts, manager of the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California. This department of the club, co-operating with the school boards, first inaugurated safety instruction in the public schools of Southern California nine years ago, but even more widespread results are anticipated under the new State law. Co-operating with Lefferts in preparation of the manual were Miles Katherine Lee Carey, assistant superintendent of schools, and M. E. Herriott in charge of secondary school curriculum development. Valuable contributions were made by others interested in child welfare. The manual is just off the press and will be used for the first time in the public schools beginning with the fall term.

CONGRESS AIDS HIGHWAY WORK

Colton-Oddie Legislation Helps Some States

Large, Nontaxable Areas to Get New Roads

Construction in 100,000-Mile Area to be Speeded

With the western States intensively interested in highways, Congress has moved to lend Federal assistance through the enactment of the Colton-Oddie bill authorizing appropriations for the construction and improvement of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands and nontaxable Indian lands.

This measure, which has been consistently supported by organized motorists, is of far-reaching importance in the eleven far-western States where the bulk of the land is owned by the Federal government.

The Colton-Oddie bill, sponsored by Senator Tasker L. Oddie of Nevada, and Representative Don B. Colton of Utah, has the same purposes as the measure vetoed by President Coolidge in 1928, except that it leaves to Congress the actual amount to be appropriated for the work. It is believed that President Hoover will sign the revised bill.

In effect, the measure passed by the Senate June 18, on the heels of favorable action in the House, amended the act providing for the United States to aid in road building. As a result, Congress is enabled by law to consider the large Federal owned and transferable areas of the West.

"This Society," says the statement, "could only be used in a State having in excess of 3 per cent of the total area of all of its land in unappropriated public lands and nontaxable lands, and will be apportioned to those States in the proportion that said public lands, is to the total area.

"It means the speeding up of construction on highways through 100,000 square miles of unappropriated and unreserved public lands and the building of important links in transcontinental roads.

"This is in fact that the country is so sparsely settled and the amount of taxable property so small, it was impossible to raise funds for this much needed construction by local taxation."

Hot Weather Means More Use of Oil

Unless proper precautions are taken, hot weather is one of the car's worst enemies.

In order to meet hot-weather driving conditions, the following points are given by Frank W. Nutt, research engineer:

Oil must be in sufficient quantity, of the right grade and kept clean. Few persons realize it, but oil is a very important cooling agency. All available water and air will not keep a motor cool without a sufficient quantity of good oil.

To keep the oil clean the oil filter should be serviced every 10,000 miles. The filter naturally picks up more impurities from the oil in summer than in any other season.

The cooling system should be inspected, kept well filled with water and drained and flushed once a month in hot weather.

Proper attention to lubrication and the cooling system, Mr. Nutt says, will insure trouble-free motoring from these sources in the warmest weather, and protect the engine and parts against unnecessary wear.

AUTOMOBILE FINISHES MAY BECOME SUNBURNED

BY G. W. SHERWIN

How many people know that an automobile gets sunburned? A sunburned automobile sounds ridiculous, yet it is true that the sun does alter the appearance of the finish of a motor car.

Everyone knows that an automobile finish gradually loses its luster and beauty, if it is not polished at regular intervals. Two things take place. First, a thin film of dirt accumulates on the finish and becomes baked there by the sun and engine heat. Second, the finish itself becomes weathered through frequent exposure to the sun, rain, heat, and cold.

RAY DESTRUCTIVE

The element most destructive to automobile finishes is the ultra-violet ray of the sun. This is the ray which is chiefly responsible for burning or tanning the skin of human beings.

Duco and lacquer are much more durable than the old paint and varnish finishes used on automobiles. Duco and lacquer, however, don't last forever. They slowly wear out through a microscopic erosion of the surface, releasing tiny pigment particles which were originally put into the finish to color it. The ultra-violet rays of the sun cause this slow disintegration.

When polish is rubbed on a car finish, and the cloth becomes stained with the color of the car, there are simply transferred to the cloth small particles of chalked pigment which are no longer a part of the finish and which should be removed anyway. As long as these particles and the hardened dirt film cover the finish, there will be no lustre. When, however, the "traffic film" and chalked pigment are removed, the original color and luster of the finish are restored and it is just as bright and shiny as when the car was new.

TWO METHODS USED

If the finish is very old, or has been very thin at the start, it may have weathered right through to the undercoat. Should this happen, it will be apparent when the car is polished, because the undercoat is usually of a different and darker color. In this case, the car should be refinished at least at the spots where the undercoat is showing.

There are two ways of prolonging the life of the finish. First, by protecting it from the sun as much as possible. Second, by having it waxed.

Ordinary window glass excludes the ultra-violet rays of the sun. One can sit behind a closed window all day long and not get sunburned, even though the sun is shining directly on the person. Polishing wax, like window glass, excludes the ultra-violet rays of the sun. If, therefore, there is applied a thin coating of wax over the finish, it will filter out the ultra-violet rays and retard weathering until the wax wears off.

APPLY POLISH WAX

It is best to apply a polishing wax to a car as soon as it is purchased. If, however, this is neglected, a polishing wax can always be applied as long as there is a finish on the car. But the finish must be thoroughly cleansed before a wax can be applied satisfactorily. It is not enough to have the car washed. It must be polished also, to remove the chalked pigment and traffic film. If the car has not been polished for some time, it is best to make two or three applications of the polish before using the wax, making sure to remove every bit of chalked pigment and dirt film.

Then apply the polishing wax, using it sparingly and rubbing it vigorously to develop a good shine. It will probably not produce any higher luster than was developed with the polish, but it will give a luster which will last for months—and it will protect the finish as well.

DOWN SOUTH

In the summer time, there is a great deal more ultra-violet in the sunlight than in the winter time, so it is especially important to have the car polished and waxed regularly in summer. Waxing is important also in the Southern States, where there is a lot of sunshine throughout the year and where finishes become weathered a great deal more rapidly than they do in the North.

Water absorption is also injurious to automotive finishes and can be prevented by waxing the car. Water flows out in a sheet on a weathered finish, indicating moisture absorption, but it forms in droplets on a waxed surface, showing that the wax prevents the water penetrating into the pores of the finish.

Officials Set Closing Date in Yellowstone

YELLOWSTONE PARK (Wyo.) Aug. 30.—Hotels and lodges in Yellowstone National Park, will remain open until September 19 to accommodate park visitors, officials of the park utilities have announced. In order to quiet rumors to the contrary.

"Some circulation has been given to the story that, hotels and lodges in the park would close the 15th inst., W. M. Nichols, assistant to the president of the hotel company, said, "but there is no foundation whatsoever for these reports. All of the hostelries in the park will remain open until the official close of the park season, September 19, and the same high-grade service will continue until the last visitor has departed."

It was explained by Mr. Nichols, however, that it will be necessary to be in the park by September 15, in order to complete the loop trip, which takes four and one-half days.

Boal Advanced to New Post

E. A. Boal, formerly Los Angeles district manager of the Ajax and McClaren Rubber companies, has just been made Pacific Coast manager.

Mr. Boal has been associated with H. L. McClaren, president of the Ajax and McClaren Rubber companies, for more than fourteen years. He was branch manager of the Ajax Rubber Company division for eight years and during the past two years was Los Angeles district manager for the Ajax and McClaren Rubber companies. Previously Boal was sales manager for the Los Angeles district of the Racine Rubber Company.

Frank Hogan, huge catcher of the Giants, is prouder of a clean steal he made in the last two years than of any other achievement.

"Old Faithful" Geyser Gains in Popularity

Interest in Old Faithful geyser in Yellowstone National Park, of which many persons now gray-haired read in their grade-school geographies, never wanes, but on the contrary, according to park officials, seems to be gaining in popularity.

It is not uncommon that guests arriving in the park first inquire about Old Faithful and, after declaring they had been well repaid after seeing the geyser erupt, if they didn't see another park wonder.

Old Faithful erupts with almost uncanny regularity, hurling into the air every sixty-three minutes over 15,000 gallons of water, or about 350,000 gallons a day. The column of water is about 150 feet in height.

Hundreds of guests daily take advantage of the tours conducted in the basin in which Old Faithful is located for the purpose of hearing the details, explanation of the various geysers and hot pools, given by members of the ranger naturalist staff. The bear lecture by Ranger Naturalist Martindale and the illustrated lecture in the museum are also well attended.

Scenic Spots Described in Bus Booklets

Illustrated with photographic half-tones of many of the nation's scenic wonders, a series of booklets describing points of interest on the nation-wide motor coach system of Pickwick Greyhound and affiliated lines is now off the press and is available at all the company's offices and agencies.

The booklets contain pictures of California missions, scene from several national parks, including Yosemite, Glacier, Yellowstone and Estes; glimpses of San Francisco's Chinatown and Carlsbad Caverns of New Mexico; Arizona's cliff dwellings; the Alamo in San Antonio; views along the Mississippi River and Minnesota's Ten Thousand Lakes; Niagara Falls, harnessed with fetters of ice, and many others. Authentic historical sketches, entertainingly written, accompany the illustrations.

San Jose Oil Company Sold to Corporation

Ralph G. Bowman, assistant general sales manager of the General Petroleum Corporation of California, refiners and marketers of Violet Ray and General Ethyl gasolines, announces the purchase of A. M. Mortensen, Inc., oil-distributing organization of San Jose. This is the fourteenth oil-distributing company acquired by the General Petroleum Corporation on the Pacific Coast since February of 1930.

The acquisition by General Petroleum Corporation includes all of the physical property, such as storage tanks, trucks, garages and other facilities.

Effective with the taking over of this organization, Mr. Mortensen will join the General Petroleum Corporation sales organization as manager of the San Jose district.

Work Begun on Mine Trail

Men and mules have begun the work of building the John Muir trail cut-off west of Junction Peak in the Sequoia National Park High Sierra country. With a camp on the upper waters of Tundall Creek near South American Lakes, the crew is working the trail toward Kings-Kern Divide, and the new pass which has been named Foresters' Pass.

This section of the John Muir trail will connct with the High Sierra trail from Giant Forest to the summit of Mt. Whitney, several sections of which will be available for travel next year, according to reports received by the Automobile Club of Southern California.

WOOD APPOINTED

Appointment of Wilmer Wood as district manager of the Reo Motor Car Company for California, Arizona and Nevada is announced by W. A. B. Hanchett, Reo regional manager for the Pacific Coast region.

CUSTOM DESIGN BODIES OFFERED

Motor More Powerful Than Previous Models

Launching the most intensive program in Cadillac's history, an entirely new line of Cadillac V-8 motor cars went on display yesterday in the show rooms of Don Lee, California Cadillac-LaSalle distributor.

The new cars are more powerful, faster, more flexible than any eights Cadillac has ever built, and, in addition display new style and appearance features which establish new high standards of design for cars in their price class.

Prices have been lowered from $700 to $800 below previous models, making the price range from $2895 to $3795.

In addition to the present lines, a new V-type, twelve-cylinder Cadillac will be presented during the early fall.

Six Fisher custom body styles and four Fleetwood special custom bodies comprise the complete line mounted on the Cadillac chassis.

The cars are lower, more graceful and suggest a greater fleetness than any previous ones in the line.

Height, length and wheel size are all in harmonious proportion to the hood, cowl and overall length. New molding treatment adds to the fleet, streamline effect. Curves at the rear of the top have been refined to increase the low-swung appearance.

The front of the new car, as well as the mechanism, shows the influence of the Cadillac V-12s. A chromium-plated screen covers the radiator, chrome uprights support large chromium-plated headlights of a special design. A tie bar between the lamps carries a black and silver V-8 medallion. Radiator shutters are built in and ports replace the slotted louvres formerly used in the hood. Chrome-plated parking lights are mounted on top of the front fenders. Two vibrator horns are standard equipment. The single-bar chrome-plated bumpers, large and very strong, are of the same design as those introduced on the V-12. A curved dust shield completely hides the front springs, and in the rear a tailored valance protects the gasoline tank. Two combination stop and tail lights are carried on the rear fenders.

The hubs of the wheels are large while the wheel diameter is small.

Doors are wide. Head room, even with lower bodies, is exceptional. Seats are scientifically fitted for maximum comfort. Adequate shoulder support is provided by the backs of the seats.

Insulation of Auto Bodies Adds Comfort

And now comes the insulated automobile body, protected from heat, cold and noise. The insulation is on the thermal principle that bars the passage of heat and cold, and sound insulation that shuts out noise. Used on the dash panel which separates the motor from the passenger compartment, this material shuts out engine heat and sound far more effectively than can any thickness of metal.

The adoption of insulation board in the construction of automobile bodies follows its coming into general use in good homes during the past ten years, and its more recent appropriation by leading airplane manufacturers to protect passengers in their cabin planes from cold and noise.

First of the leading automobiles to adopt insulation board as an integral part of body construction is General Motors' line of new Buick eights. In these cars, the engine is effectively shut off from the passenger space by three-quarters of an inch of Celotex cane fiber insulation placed on the back side of the steel dash panel. This not only prevents passage of motor heat backward, but also stops transmission of sound from the motor to passengers.

Gildner Joins Income Trust

Carl C. Gildner, formerly Hollywood branch manager for W. M. Murphy Motors Company, and nationally known in automotive sales circles, has just retired from the automobile business to become sales manager for O. W. Heinz & Co., underwriters for the $5,000,000 C. C. C. Tatum Building Income Trust, which plans to build a group of height-limit structures in this area.

Mr. Gildner at one time was wholesale and retail sales manager for E. V. Armstrong, Inc., and also served as executive sales manager for the Moon Motor Car Company. In addition to Mr. Gildner, the O. W. Heinz concern has recently been joined by Earl J. Loudon, who was sales promotion manager for the Plymouth Corp., and prior to that was general sales manager for the Locomobile Company of Southern California. Mr. Heinz, also, is an automotive man, having been president of the Apex Motor Car Company of Detroit prior to its sale to General Motors.

Emergency Gas Service Starts

Another type of gasoline emergency service unit, manufactured by Whealton and Townsend, a local concern, is being offered to Los Angeles gas service stations. This unit is fitted with gas cans, and requires the insertion of 50 cents to get gas, but the container is worth 25 cents when returned to the station. It offers solace to the man who has "run out" of gas and has walked to a closed station, and finds only a 5-cent service charge to get the coveted gas.

ROAD NOW OILED

The road is now oiled from Deadman's Pass to Mono Lake, according to a report received by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Highway Information

The following highway information was issued by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California under date of September 2, 1930. Motorists desiring additional information may secure same by communicating directly with the club.

TO NORTHEASTERN KERN COUNTY AND RETURN, 302 Miles. Three-day trip.

From Los Angeles motorists will find an excellent paved highway by way of San Fernando, the Weldon Canyon cut-off to Saugus, thence by way of the Ridge Route to Bakersfield.

Leaving Bakersfield a hard surfaced and oiled road extends by way of Kinderhook, Buttonwillow and Nile streets to Cottonwood Creek and 1.5 miles beyond from where a wide graveled road, in excellent condition, is followed by way of the main canyon of the Kern River through Democrat and Hobo Hot Springs to the old town of Bodfish. Turning to the left a graveled road, in good condition, continues through the Valley to Isabella and Kernville. Just beyond Isabella, on crossing the Kern River for the second time, the motorist will find a road turning to the left to Lake Isabella, one of the high mountain lakes in Kern county. The orchards, vines and stuff are still in production.

One mile south of Kernville one finds the old chimney, the only evidence of the town Bourbon, during mining camp of Quartzburg.

Leaving Kernville, in order to follow a road that the motorist returns to Bakersfield, turn turning to the left a graveled highway, in good condition, is followed through the Scodi Fork Valley via Wofco and Onyx to Weldon. Route to Fresno Permissible, although part the Owens Valley Road is unconstructed.

Turning to the right there road oil-bound gravel is followed to within six miles of Red Rock Canyon, gravel road to within one-half mile of Union, with oiled gravel to Mojave, from which point pavement is followed by way of Lancaster, Palmdale, Mint Canyon and Saugus to Los Angeles.

VISITORS AT SEQUOIA PARK SET NEW MARK

Smashing all-time records of the Sequoia National Park, the total travel for the current year passed 111,500 people on the 25th inst., with travel up to September 30, the close of the travel year, yet to be recorded. The 1929 year figure of 111,025 visitors was the previous high record; but a conservative estimate for the present year, based on entries to date, is for a total close to 120,000.

LONG DETOUR NECESSARY

The following construction will be encountered on United States Highway No. 80 between San Diego and El Centro: 1.4 miles of one-way travel over pavement just west of Pine Valley and a good eight-mile gravel detour starting one mile South of Buckman Springs.

End of Three-Flag Flight by Girl

After Sixteen Hours Flying

James Crofton, leading welcoming committee at Agua Caliente, greeting Miss Ruth Alexander, record-setting girl flyer, as she lands at the border resort after setting a new nonstop woman's light-plane record in her low-wing Berling monoplane. The flight was sponsored by the Richfield Oil Company.

FLIGHT TIME TO BE RECORD

Following a check of the barograph carried by Miss Ruth Alexander in her plane on her nonstop flight between Canada and Mexico, announcement was made here yesterday by William Van Dusen, official representative of the National Aeronautical Association at San Diego, that her record will be, without a doubt, recognized as official.

Miss Alexander's time, according to Mr. Van Dusen, was exactly 15h. 04m. 30s., one minute faster than the preliminary figures which had been issued to the press. Van Dusen, in checking the run, acted as representative, also, for the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

This, it is explained, was because the flight was from Canadian soil to Mexico, without touching the United States. The F.A.I. record will stand as an international one for women flyers with light planes.

Technical men who checked over Miss Alexander's low-wing Berling plane, reported yesterday that the motor was in splendid shape despite the long aerial grind at top speed. The flight was sponsored by the Richfield Oil Company.

The scene at Agua Caliente last Monday night when Miss Alexander set her little ship down on the lighted airport was a dramatic one. Fear for the girl pilot's safety had been felt owing to the fact that not one report had been received from the time she took off at 3:19 o'clock that morning in Vancouver. Added to the fears were the known facts that she had taken off in a heavy fog and that she all day had been battling adverse weather conditions.

Then, shortly after 7 o'clock, the anxious watchers heard the roar of her motor.

"Here she comes!" cried excited members of the crowd, most of which, by the way, were women aviation enthusiasts.

STATE AIRPORTS IN LEAD

There were ninety-six more airports and landing fields in existence in the United States on July 15, last, than there were six and one-half months ago, according to a report compiled by the aeronautics branch, Department of Commerce. California holds the lead with 164 airports of various classifications. Texas, the only other State with more than 100, is second with a 115 total.

On July 15, there were 1457 municipal, commercial, intermediate, auxiliary, army, navy, and miscellaneous government and private airports and landing fields, while on January 1 there were 1561.

Ohio and Pennsylvania each has eighty-five, occupying third place. California, aside from having the largest total, also has the largest number of municipal and commercial airports and intermediate fields. This State, on July 15, had fifty-six municipal and fifty-seven commercial airports and twenty-seven intermediate fields. Texas led in the number of auxiliary fields and army airdromes, having thirty-five of the first type and fifteen of the latter. Texas also stood second in the number of municipal airports, with forty-six. Ohio had forty-two commercial airports, which was the second largest number, and Pennsylvania had twenty-four intermediate landing fields the second largest number in this classification.

The list compiled by the aeronautics branch, shows that on July 15 there were 502 municipal, 535 commercial, 233 intermediate, 300 auxiliary, sixty army and fourteen navy airports and landing fields, and seven miscellaneous government and private airports.

Those fields established by towns or cities are classified as municipal, and those established by private commercial interests are classed as commercial airports. Intermediate fields are established and maintained by the Department of Commerce on the Federal airways, and are marked and equipped with lights and other facilities. Auxiliary fields include those which are established and marked locally in some manner for the use of aircraft, but do not have the same standard of equipment and facilities as the other types.

Of the total number of airports and landing fields the largest increase has occurred in the number of intermediate fields established and maintained by the Department of Commerce. There are now 233 of these, while on the first of this year there were 282, a total increase of fifty-one.

The report as compiled by the aeronautics branch follows:

Tire Company Shifts Regional Quarters Here

The regional headquarters of the tire division of the United States Rubber Company, serving eleven western States, have been transferred to Los Angeles. As a result of this important move, J. B. Magee, regional manager of the tire division, comes to Los Angeles from San Francisco and with his staff will occupy offices in the United States Rubber Company Building at Eighth and San Pedro streets.

Magee has been a prominent executive in trade development in this section for the past fifteen years, and while his duties will take him throughout the extensive regional territory, he expects to devote the major portion of his time to the important tasks here.

The largest tire month in the history of United States Rubber was established by July, Magee said, in which Los Angeles as one of the important territories in the region played its part. This city, Magee continued, is one of the most active tire markets in the United States.

Motor Travel to Mountains Shows Gains

Average week-end recreation travel in Los Angeles county's mountain regions reaches a total of approximately 24,000 persons riding in 10,000 automobiles, according to a check made by the combined forces of the United States Forest Service and Los Angeles County Forestry Department over an average recent summer week-end.

This amazing total of visitors seeking recreation in the mountain areas of a single county not only indicates the great desire of motorists to get into the out-of-door mountain land, but also the scope of the fire hazard in the forest region.

The figures emphasize the moral that those who go into the mountain regions at this time must be extremely careful with fire, Spence D. Turner, county firewarden, and the Forest Service, point out that this is a period of high fire hazard because of the dryness of brush and wood after the rainless summer season. Not only because of the damage which might be caused to timber is this warning voiced, but also because of the possible loss in human lives if fire should break out in any of these crowded canyons and timber slopes.

RUSSIANS BUY TRUCKS HERE

One of the biggest motor truck export transactions ever negotiated has just been completed between the Russian government and the Moreland Motor Truck Company of Los Angeles. The deal involves more than $300,000, and is the forerunner of orders that will total $2,000,000 worth of these trucks and parts.

Consummation of the purchase came after a year and a half of negotiations between Watt L. Moreland, head of the Moreland company, and the Amtorg Trading Company, purchasing department of the Russian government.

Eight months ago two Moreland sample trucks were shipped to the soviet union for demonstration purposes. This led to a world-wide investigation of six-wheel motor equipment by the Russian government.

Nearly half of the first consignment has gone forward already, having been shipped from Los Angeles Harbor, via the Panama Canal. Remaining units are to be shipped as they are completed.

The initial order includes 100 six-wheel, four-wheel drive, motor trucks. The entire consignment, and practically all of subsequent deliveries, will consist of heavy-duty, six-wheel units.

Visitors to Parks Gain This Season

National parks of California continue to attract increasing numbers of visitors.

During the first seven months of this year an increase of 19.3 per cent was registered over last year in the Sequoia National Park. This has been visited by 94,174 persons. In the increase of travel noted 8.4 per cent went from States other than California.

An increase of nearly 10 per cent is reported from Yosemite for the first seven months of this year, compared with a similar period in 1929. There were 195,988 cars up to the 1st inst.

One of the interesting developments reported by the service officials in Sequoia Park is the work on three great trail projects. These are now nearing completion and one which interests hikers is that leading to the "top of the United States." This is the trail up Mt. Whitney, the highest point in continental United States.

Navy Veteran in New Role

Gained from the ship's mast watch at Uncle Sam's great Pacific fleet steamed into the harbor, aboard a man who after twenty-one years of active service in the Navy has forsaken the sea to direct the marine activities of a large company.

He is Lieutenant-Commander Leighton M. Stedman, United States Naval Reserve, commanding the ninth Fleet Division and member of the board of governors of the California Nautical School, recently established.

Lieutenant-Commander Stedman is now acting as supervisor of marine sales for the Associated Oil Company.

Now... is the time to buy a new MORELAND

MORELAND is offering special low prices and startling allowances on used trucks. Right now, your old equipment is worth more as part payment on a new Moreland than you can possibly earn with the service left in it . . . . . .

MORELAND is making a strenuous effort to maintain factory production... to keep men on the payroll. Therefore, Moreland is willing to temporarily forego factory profit in order to stimulate new truck sales. This profit is handed on to the buyer in the form of a liberal trade-in-allowance.

All models are 1930...right-up-to-the-minute in design, with every modern feature, including bevel, worm, or double-reduction axle drives. If you are trying to cut expenses, here is a good chance to replace obsolete, profit-eating equipment with a brand new Moreland.

Moreland offers you a truck made-to-order for the West...a vehicle built right here in the West, with no making-over to fit your job. And Moreland prices are right now the lowest in the history of the company.

Here are five reasons why this is absolutely the time to act:

You get a special low price.

You get a big allowance on your old truck.

You eliminate profit waste by abandoning inefficient equipment.

You get a modern "custom-built" Moreland.

You speed the return of good times by helping to keep a western factory filled with workers.

This special offer is for a limited period only.. so NOW is the time for a NEW MORELAND.

New Coaches in Service on Bus Line

The largest consignment of new intercity motor coaches ever delivered to a western operating company, thirty coaches comprising half a trainload and valued at $450,000, was placed in operation last week on Pacific Greyhound Lines between San Diego and San Francisco, it was stated by J. H. Hodge, assistant general manager.

The record-breaking shipment arrived a few days ago over the Southern Pacific from General Motors factory at Pontiac, Mich., and is part of a 105-coach order placed earlier this year by Pacific Greyhound Lines with General Motors and C. H. Will Corporation of Oakland, totaling in value $1,575,000.

Magnet Truck Gathers Tons of Punctures

PHOENIX, Aug. 23. (Exclusive)—Estimate is made by the Arizona Highway Commission that its traveling magnet truck in the past two years has picked 150,000 pounds of puncture-producing metals from the main highways of the State. There also is observation concerning the consequent moral betterment of Arizona motor-car drivers who in the past have been compelled repeatedly to change tires on the hot highways across the State.

Quantities of nails, railroad spikes, tacks, wire particles, knives, forks and spoons and even spring-leaf sections come up to the magnets, which are carried five inches above the roadway as the truck is driven along at about twenty-five miles an hour.

Healthy Improvement in Automobile Industry Anticipated Result of New Developme

NEW CAR PRICE CUTS AID SALES

Sixty Per Cent of Purchases on Installments

Ford Credit Business Totals $500,000,000

Low-cost Class Holding Best Industry Position

DETROIT, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—With schedules that call for increased production, introduction of new models, and low stocks in hands of dealers, a substantial stepping up is virtually assured in the current month of September. Price reductions on both current and new models will help in no small way to stimulate buying which, when once started in a big way, is expected to continue for some time.

At present, manufacturers' production cars in only sufficient numbers to satisfy demands of buyers and fill orders of their dealers. No attempts are made at "overloading," which in past years has been shown to be a poor business policy for both producer and dealer. It is predicted that all manufacturers will go the limit during this and coming years to see that dealers' operations are on a more profitable and stable basis.

ON TIME CONTRACTS

Of all passenger automobiles sold in the United States in 1929 81 per cent were purchased on the installment plan, and less than 4 per cent were repossessed for failure to maintain payments. Installment purchased cars number 3,476,343 of which 1,320,435 were new and the remainder second-hand.

The Universal Credit Company—the authorized Ford financing plan—reports that its volume of business in financing cars and trucks passed the $500,000,000 mark the 2nd inst. This company is only 26 months old, and has thirty-two branches in operation in the United States and Mexico. Its business in August was at the rate of $1,000,000 per day for every working day.

Complete new lines of Cadillac and La Salle V-type eight-cylinder cars are on display. The cars present notable improvements in design, comfort and luxury. Of especial interest to the buying public in the high-class range is the fact that prices on these new models will be from $180 to $600 lower. The new program contemplates complete coverage of the fine-car market with consequent greater volume.

Prices for the La Salle line will range from $2191 to $2340.

Entering the seventh consecutive year as builder of straight-eight automobiles, the Gardner Motor Company of St. Louis today announced a new and improved line of eights as its 1931 contribution to transportation.

The new line is made up of five body types in both open and closed models, including roadster, phaeton, brougham sedan and sport sedan. With price ranges from $1795 for the roadster to $1895 for the sedan. From a mechanical standpoint the new cars are basically the same as the 1930 models, although there have been several mechanical changes. One of them is the four-speed transmission.

DE LUXE ROADSTER

Another de luxe car, the roadster with sport lines, is announced by the Ford Motor Company as an addition to the group of de luxe body types which now includes a phaeton, a coupe and a sedan. Packard's and Stutz's new lines soon will be ready for introduction and the market.

Apportionment of the Federal funds for highway improvement in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932 has been authorized by Arthur M. Hyde, Secretary of Agriculture. As a result, States are enabled to anticipate the Federal fund which will be paid to them next July, and may advance their highway programs at once.

Congress has appropriated $125,000,000 for the fiscal year which will begin July 1, 1931. Of this amount $121,875,000 will be available after deduction of administrative expenses.

Chevrolet dealers throughout the country are being stocked with a new Chevrolet one and half-ton truck. The new chassis is built complete with cab, and affiliations with body manufacturers enable the purchaser to choose the exact type of body for the work to be done from no less than thirty-six different types.

Headed by W. C. Durant, plans are being rushed for the start of production of 100,000 American Mathis cars, in the Lansing (Mich.) and Oakland (Cal.) plants of Durant Motors, Inc. This company has an exclusive contract for the manufacture of these bantam cars in this country. It is planned also to continue the present Durant line.

Edward Verflinden, well known in automobile circles, and former lieutenant of Mr. Durant in both Durant and General Motors circles, will, it is stated, probably be appointed manager of production, and possibly will take over the general managership of the Lansing plant. Harry J. Shorter has been appointed general sales manager. He has held executive positions with Durant Motors at St. Louis, Pittsburgh, Elizabeth, N. J. and New York City.

Indications point strongly to the fact that the public is buying transportation in the low-price fields, to the disadvantage of medium and high-priced producers. This, however, is considered only temporary, and an upward swing is expected to occur long before the end of the current year.

American Austin officials announce that orders now on hand are sufficient to absorb three years' production at the present rate of output. By the first of December the little Mathis cars will be available, and when once started production will be forced with all possible speed. With these two newcomers getting into production, and with Ford, Chevrolet, Plymouth and Whippet plants already in the field with new, low-priced models, competition in the auto industry among cars selling under $700 is sure to heighten. The outlook for the final quarter of 1930 is far from pessimistic, and manufacturers are continuing their expansion programs and building new cars in preparation for business that is sure to come.

AUTOMOTIVE ODDITIES - By Pete Keenan

HIGHWAY MARKERS GREAT AID TO AUTO TRAVELERS

Reports received by the bureau of public roads, Department of Agriculture, indicate that the work of erecting the standard markers for numbered routes in the United States system of highways will be practically complete at the end of the construction period of 1930. The system was adopted less than five years ago by State highway departments, and comprises approximately 97,000 miles of the most important highways of the nation. Practically all of these routes are also in the Federal-aid highway system.

The numbering of the United States highways, which are really the main streets of the nation, is doing for the rural communities what the naming of streets has done for the cities. Because of their convenience the numbers have established themselves and have become popular with motorists. They not only indicate direction, but are coming into use as a means of identifying locations.

Just as the names of streets became the practical means of identifying thoroughfares in cities, the numbered highways have displaced the names by which some of the roads, particularly the transcontinental highways, were previously known. Motorists are forgetting the old designations, which, because of duplications, often caused confusion.

Ten main east and west routes, designated by multiples of ten, and eleven important north and south routes, numbered 1, 11, 21 31, etc., up to and including 101, form the backbone of the system. The system includes not only these important through-routes but also many cross-overs that connect main routes. The highways of the system reach practically all of the large cities and serve every section of the country. The cross-over or branch lines are indicated by three digits, such as 290, 141, etc.

All east and west highways, as well as their branches, have even numbers; all those running north and south with their branch lines have odd numbers.

The signs bearing the numbers are of standard size, and are in the shape of a shield. They have a white background on which appear, in black, the name of the State, the initials "U.S." and the route number. Generally, the markers are erected one mile apart.

Work on the designation of a system of United States highways started in February, 1925, when, on the recommendation of the American Association of State Highway Officials, the Secretary of Agriculture appointed the joint board on interstate highways, consisting of State and Federal officials, to undertake the designation.

Bus Fares Cut to Record Low

Motor coach travel rates stand today at a new all-time low as a result of reductions placed in effect on Pickwick Greyhound and affiliated lines, according to Charles P. Wren, president. The new round trip and one-way tariffs are effective from the 10th inst. to September 30, Wren said.

"Travelers from Los Angeles or San Diego," Wren stated, "may now go to New York for $55.60, or $106 for the round trip; Boston, $58.05, round trip $110.50; Chicago or Minneapolis $36.70, round trip $70.55; Kansas City $31.50, round trip $59.85; Denver $24.75, round trip $47.05. Corresponding reductions of 10 per cent are effective to other points."

In addition to the foregoing excursion rates, special round-trip tariffs of a fare and a half are effective over Pickwick Greyhound's Santa Fe Trail route from Los Angeles to Raton, N. M., or intervening points, and from Denver to Albuquerque, it was explained by J. D. Watson, general traffic manager.

"The special rates over the Santa Fe Trail," Watson said, "are designed in part to stimulate travel to Albuquerque for the Great American Indian celebration, to be held there from the 19th to the 23rd inst., inclusive. This unique and colorful powwow annually attracts thousands of visitors to the New Mexico metropolis and is participated in by hundreds of Indians from many tribes."

FOREIGN CAR MARKET GRADUALLY BETTERING

BY ROBERT C. GRAHAM

Chairman of Export Committee, National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

The gradual disposal of stocks of cars overseas is making for a healthy condition and warrants a more promising outlook in the export markets.

During the last nine months there has been a recession in the purchasing power of people throughout the world, due to the drop in the prices of primary products like wheat, cotton and copper, which serve as the principal medium of many foreign people in acquiring automobiles.

Economies effected by American manufacturers and passed on to foreign consumers in the form of greater values of motor transportation are gradually having the result that no greater number of bales of cotton, bushels of wheat or similar commodities are required in obtaining automobiles than was the case in the beginning of last year. This adjustment of American automobiles to the purchasing power of foreign people based on the income they derive from the sale of their own products is making for a healthy fundamental situation and old stocks of cars liquidated may stimulate a gradual upward trend in exports.

Already there are some brightening spots in the export horizon. Dealers in Scandinavia appear to enjoy a reasonable volume of business; Ecuador is showing signs of improvement as a result of better prices, which now prevail for its principal product—cocoa. Mexico has been showing very far-sighted attitude toward motor transport developments, and there are signs of increases above the present volume, which has been quite attractive right along.

Disturbances in India, although hampering, are not stopping business entirely of dealers in Bombay and Delhi. Some orders are coming from Australia, even though general conditions are reputed as being very poor.

The automobile industry is fully aware of the importance of the export business and through the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce is organizing committees, which are made up of export specialists, to help solve problems of the various markets or to revise practices and gather data in expanding transport throughout the world.

Woodruff of Tire Factory Secured Here

Lee S. Woodruff, general sales manager of the McClaren Rubber Company, who has been with this organization since its inception, has resigned to become vice-president and sales manager of the McClaren Tire Company, local distributors of McClaren tires.

Mr. Woodruff was one of the original organizers and developers of the McClaren tire which was introduced in 1920. From 1922 to 1926 he was Pacific Coast manager for the company, and in 1926 was made general sales manager.

When Leland A. Irish, president of the McClaren Tire Company, executed the first of a series of expansion plans this month by opening a larger service department at 1140 South Hope street, across the street from the general offices, he secured the services of Mr. Woodruff to take charge of the development of retail and commercial sales and service.

Italian Tells of Lengthy Motor Trip

Interest in the proposal to link the nations of South America by motor-car highways with North America will be furthered by a recently published book of adventure called "Heart and Will Power." The new book recites the adventures of Jose Mario De Barone, Italian ace, who is credited with having made the first trip by automobile from South America into the United States, completing a journey of 10,000 miles, which required more than two years.

In his story of the trip Barone describes the dangers which lurked in trackless jungles, swamps and high mountain ranges which he had to cross. He also tells of the tragic deaths of three of his companions who at different times succumbed to accident or fever.

Prior to the start of the intercontinental trip Barone had covered more than 100,000 miles in his veteran light six, a considerable part of the mileage being piled up in races on dirt tracks. One of his more strenuous stunts he describes as the "leap of death," in which he thrilled his audiences by leaping from the edge of a ramp into thin air to land on a second ramp or on the ground when the terrain was suitable for the stunt.

At one place in the book he tells of the use of this stunt to get the car across a chasm which could not be crossed in the usual manner. After a careful survey of the chasm he told his companion that they would pull the "leap of death." No special preparation could be made other than to clear the path of boulders and brush. A point was chosen that promised some chance of safe landing on the opposite bank. With wide-open throttle the car was rushed at the chasm, it leaped into the air and landed on the far side, where it clung for a breath-taking moment until the rear wheels gained traction and pulled them up the opposite bank.

CHECKERS

BY JOHN DOUGHERTY

September 7, 1930

Chess and Checker Headquarters, 900 Union League Building, corner of Second and Hill streets. All chess and checker players invited to join.

All communications intended for this department should be addressed to John Dougherty, 4026 Dalton avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

AMONG THE FANS

Willie Ryan writes that in about six weeks he will start on a tour that will bring him to Seattle, Wash., and that he will come to Los Angeles if he receives a guarantee of $25 for an exhibition to help defray expenses.

This should be easily raised so write at once on the proposition.

If we want to see the world's checker championship held by an American now is the time to get behind the Banks vs. Stewart match. Stewart's expenses to and from Scotland will be a neat sum, and that added to the purse will run up to $3000 or over. I think all players should be interested enough to help raise the money.

As a rule, I am not in favor of raising large purses for the experts to play for; but when it comes to a world's championship match, I believe in help boosting it along. The Cedar Point Checker Association is behind the proposition and Mr. E. H. Greene headed the list with a $100 contribution. Any contribution you wish to make, send direct to H. J. McCory, 1108 Cling street, Sandusky, O.

CORRECTIONS TO GAMES

Julius D'Orio writes that at 34th move of Game No. 3410 in last issue, instead of 14-9 White can draw by 25-21 and gives the following as proof: 25-21, 7-10, 14-7, 3-10, 18-14, 10-17, 21-14, 1-6, 30-25, drawn; 25-21, 1-6, 21-17, 6-10, 32-28, drawn; 25-21, if 7-11, 21-17, 11-16, 14-10, 16-20, 18-14, 20-24, 23-26, and White looks strong enough to win.

My limited space keeps me from giving D'Orio's letter in full, but he states if more of the players would study the "Mysteries of Demeh," they would be better able to analyze positions, etc.

(The editor will add that he believes "The Mysteries of Demeh" is much better book than most players give it credit, and that all grades of players can derive considerable good from perusing its pages.)

EQUIPMENT COMPANY MOVES HEADQUARTERS

The United States Equipment Company has moved into new quarters at 501 West Washington, occupying more spacious quarters than previously. This company is manufacturer and distributor of garage, service station and paint-shop equipment.

OILING OPERATIONS

Oiling operations will be encountered on the west side of the San Marcos Pass, according to a report received by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

DALLAS MOVES RIVER

Project Allows Solution of Problems Arising from Congested Traffic at "Wall of China"

DALLAS, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Stealing a page from the book of the ancient Roman Caesars, this city is spending $20,000,000 to solve its traffic problem and make all roads lead to Dallas. Stopped from physical expansion by the tiny, treacherous Trinity River, this vast sum was set aside to change the course of the river, impound it in levees, span it with four great viaducts effecting a reclaimed river-bottom area of 10,500 acres. Within six weeks the viaducts will be opened for automotive traffic, summarily removing the "Dallas great wall of China" and inaugurating the most advanced metropolitan viaduct system in the South.

Agitation to chain the Trinity reached boiling point in 1908 when the river reached a gauge height of 32.6 feet, flooding Dallas, resulting in more than $2,500,000 damage. Plans formulated at that time to eliminate the flood menace did not materialize fully until May, 1928, when the city and county of Dallas, in conjunction with public utilities and railroads, co-operated, setting aside the vast sum to provide suitable traffic outlets, protect the city, reclaim certain acreage for industrial development purposes. The immediate value of the undertaking is the solution of the traffic situation in Dallas county; the remote, but not too distant—value is the providing of industrial sites three minutes from the heart of the business district.

Gravely concerned because of meteoric growth of other Texas cities, notably Houston, cognisant of the recent growth of West Texas cities, towns, villages, Dallas was spurred to action in an effort to solidify its market area; recognizing that boulevards, viaducts must be provided for the primary agency of contact, the automobile. Prior to inception of undertakings, one viaduct bore the terrific, slow-moving, irritating burden of thousands of daily automobiles.

Dallas, deprived of suitable outlets, was also suffering from advanced stage internal traffic snarls, precipitated by faulty exits. Traffic engineers, importuned for aid, suggested subways, elevated tracks, additional parking; said expense would be enormous.

Civic leaders aided in crystallizing the reclamation project, which would provide viaducts, roadways, parking. Business men, theaters, hotels, automobile dealers, who had complained of declining revenue because of traffic, pushed the project. In May, 1928, a vote was had. From railroad, public utility and civic sources the $20,000,000 was appropriated.

Dallas no longer will be a marooned city. Traffic officers will smile; motorists, on week-end jaunts, will travel at high speeds; local business men will again receive outlying hamlet trade; express movements will be expedited; automobile sales will increase; Dallas's trade area will be concentrated, interlaced with safe, fast boulevards. Situated at strategic points, the four new viaducts will take care of traffic of four sections of the city. Effective, simple methods, using "time-lights" are being provided to speed cross-town traffic. Six hundred feet in length, with ninety-foot roadways, with special pedestrian lanes and fan-shaped approaches, the new viaducts will care for Dallas's needs for the next twenty-five years. The movement is in keeping with Texas's road-development program; regarded as one of the most ambitious in the country.

More than 2000 men have been employed on the project for the past two years, materially relieving the unemployment situation, keeping money in circulation, discounting jingoism about hard times. National manufacturers, leading salesexecutives, bankers, are high in their praise of the project; contending that the automobile is the primary agency in developing Texas; believing in providing vast expanses of the State with avenues of egress and ingress.

In addition to eliminating the traffic bugaboo, Dallas has provided itself with 10,500 acres of unique industrial sites, three minutes from the business district, adjoining great railroad terminals, with a site for a municipal airport, wharfage space for the day when the Trinity will be navigable to the Gulf of Mexico, some 300 miles away. Unique also in the district, from the automotive phase, is the plan for special, high-speed truck lanes. Cotton, truck garden stuff, light manufacturing products, foodstuffs, are carried to great degree by trucks to all parts of Texas.

Formation once again of the Trinity River Navigation Association may realize Dallas's composite dream of being a seaport town, distribution center, manufacturing key point to the great Southwest, which last mentioned position she maintains and guards sealously.

Officers Chosen by Air Group

A board of directors, under whose guidance the Professional Pilots' Association will continue the ensuing year, was elected as a recent meeting at the association club rooms.

Seven prominent airmen were chosen and will hold office, directing the operations of the association which is composed of 165 members, the majority of whom are engaged in the aviation business in Southern California.

The board includes Charles P. Dyer, Harold J. Lynch, Leslie C. Miller, W. D. Timm, D. W. Tomlinson, Roscoe Turner and Franklin Young, all of whom have been active in projecting the recently adopted policy of the association in which they advocate nation-wide adherence to a set of safety resolutions for all pilots and air lines.

Custom Salon Held by Cord

Considerable interest is being shown in the special Cord front-drive custom salon, which opened Wednesday at the main showroom of the Auburn-Fuller Company, 1800 South Figueroa street, and will continue until the 14th inst.

The showing consists of several town cars, three sport phaetons and all standard models including the cabriolet, which recently won the Grand Prix and cup of honor at Monte Carlo.

Miami (Fla.) University will play all of its home games at night.

The late Clara Cameron of Pomona will be greatly missed by the Correspondence Chess League of America. She was their president in 1927. She gave her time to them because, as she said, "correspondence chess is a great boon to the isolated players, shut-ins, cripples, etc." About ten years ago, through Mlotkowski's little column in a local paper, she became interested in problems. She once wrote, "Mlotkowski got me my first chess correspondent." Miss Cameron left about thirty chess books which her sister, knowing nothing of the game, would dispose of. Anyone interested should write Mrs. Nellie C. Bates, 367 Locust, Pomona, Cal.

A mammoth team match between Monroe and Leonard was won by the latter, 14½-10½, a remarkable turnout for a week between cities 400 miles apart.

In the New York State championship, Arthur Cohn, 16-year-old Brooklyn chess champ, added still a big point to his lead and has scored 7½ points. He needs a few points and can afford to lose a game or two. Cohn, who is the only one-time Pennsylvania champion, visited the Los Angeles Chess Club last week on his way east to meet Reshevsky in New York City.

The international masters tourney at Lyons, Belgium, was won by Tartakower of Poland, with Sultan Khan of India second. Dr. Alekhine next. Dr. Alekhine immediately following another tournament was to start at Frankfort, Germany.

The Speyer Blitz Club's match tourney started Thursday night with most of the outstanding experts of Southern California entered.

The ninth annual California championship tourney was concluded last Sunday at San Francisco with the following standings:

	W.	L.		W.	L.
Borochow	7	1	Tippin	5	3
Reid	6½	½	Fink	4½	3½
Patterson	6	2	Myers	4	4
Gedney	4	4	Hall	3	5

Willis Lamb, Jr., recent Los Angeles high school champ who just entered college at Berkeley, deserves great credit for his showing. Here is his neat win from Tippin, who is also entering Berkeley.

FATAL AUT... ACCIDENTS DECREAS...

Motor Vehicle Fata... Continue to Ind... Decrease

Fatalities attributed to motor vehicle accidents continue to show steady decrease in Los Angeles city and county compared to last year, it is revealed in provisional figures for the first seven months of 1930 prepared by the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

The total deaths up to July 31 last, were 231, which figure is thirty-eighth recorded in that year for the first seven months, there were 433 deaths, which represents a decrease of 12 per cent as compared to the same period last year.

Not only was there a decrease in all motor vehicle fatalities, but more decided reduction is noted among children of school age, which decreased from 33 for 1929 to 29 for 1930, or 12 per cent.

It is noted by the motor association that while a decrease in all deaths has been registered there is a decided increase in the number of pedestrians killed by violations of right of way. These numbers so far this year compared to the same period in 1929, show an increase of almost 20 per cent.

Different forms of pedestrian violations lead all causes, with more than 28 per cent of the total number of fatalities. Motor vehicle operators not crossing at intersections, not crossing streets carefully and generally confused in traffic, it is pointed out, also, that speeding on streets and permitting no more than 30 miles an hour resulted in 31 deaths so far this year as against 27 deaths from the same causes during the same period of 1929.

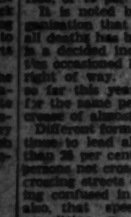
Unique Syste... Safeguards ... Tanks in F...

A unique, yet very effective fighting apparatus has been worked out and installed at the plant of the Wilshire Oil Company. The outstanding feature of the equipment is a central valve station, from which points to be sending chemicals can be turned to any tank of oil on the property. These fire protecting chemicals are used universally in regular standard pumps and other equipment supplied by automotive concerns who manufacture fire protection apparatus for oil fields. The Wilshire company is independent believed that the foam and chemicals were the best thing to use but did not believe the apparatus was always adaptable to the problems of fire that confronted them.

The usual method is to shut off valves at or near the tank or tanks in case of fire, the foaming machine is started to work and the foaming chemicals are pumped from the storage tanks to the oil tank or tanks where fire is burning, the foam compounded when the chemicals is opened near the tank. The foam is then forced into the tank in sufficient quantity for more than one tank if necessary when a fire would spread to the installation of the tank or tanks that can be handled by the equipment within a radius of [illegible]

Tucker Back After Absen... of Two Mon...

After an absence of [illegible] months R. C. Tucker, vice-president and general sales manager of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company, has returned to his desk.



R. C. TUCKER

Tucker says that business conditions throughout the country will soon enter on a period of sound prosperity. He declares that there is good reason to believe that the business depression has found the accepted bottom and that from now on business will improve. Tucker says that business men and industrial leaders everywhere are generally agreed that an improvement in business has set in and that it will gather momentum rapidly.

Tucker reports the Pierce-Arrow factory here is working twenty-four hours a day to bring its production up to current requirements.

Pedestrian in Crosswalk H... Right of W...

Pedestrians on marked crosswalks at highway intersections are controlled by traffic signals have the right of way over motorists, according to traffic ordinances in most cities.

In the Los Angeles ordinance this is specifically provided in sections stating that:

"It shall be unlawful for the operator of any vehicle to drive upon any crosswalk outside of the central traffic district, which is defined as provided in Section 11 of this ordinance, while there is a pedestrian upon the crosswalk upon the half of the roadway upon which such vehicle is traveling, or in crossing the roadway upon which the pedestrian shall have passed in crossing the path of said vehicle.

"It shall be unlawful for the operator of any vehicle to drive upon any unmarked crosswalk at any intersection where there is in such crosswalk upon the half of the roadway upon which such vehicle is traveling any pedestrian engaged in crossing the roadway until such pedestrian shall have passed beyond the center of said vehicle, when the driver of said vehicle shall indicate his intention to proceed by a timely and cautious movement, by holding up his hand and arm straight out, toward approaching traffic.

NO SHIFT TROUBLES

"WILL I use the shift this year?" sputtered Howard Harding Jones as he leaned over a difficult putt at Brentwood the other day.

"Will I use the shift?" he repeated.

"Well, you can just bet all your golf socks I will.

"And you can bet, too, that my boys will conform strictly to the one-second limit imposed by the rules.

"As far as that is concerned, I am convinced they did last year.

"There was a possible exception in the Oregon State game when through a quarterback's excitability they jumped the gun.

"But as for Pop Warner and his antishifting colleagues putting the skids under us with the new rules they have another guess coming.

"Southern California will continue to shift, and my boys will abide by the letter and spirit of the rules.

"I have read Pop Warner's remarks about the shift in past years, and recently I read his 1930 yarn about the matter.

"I am convinced he is getting slyer with the years."

WASHINGTON STATE STRONGEST

THE shift situation out of the way, Mr. Jones was asked to venture an opinion on the strongest team in the Great Northwest—Washington under a new coach, Jimmy Phelan; Oregon under a new coach, Doc Spears, Oregon State or Washington State under veteran coaches, Schissler and Hollingberry, respectively.

Without hesitation the Trojan coach replied that he considered Washington State the hardest nut in the far north.

Washington is making much ado over its prospects under Phelan and the Notre Dame system replacing the power regime of "Baggy" Bagshaw.

Oregon, too, feels cocky with a veteran team and also a new system.

I recall that Warren Brown, in introducing Jimmy Phelan to newspaper men at a luncheon in this city last spring, prophesied that Phelan would pull a surprise by knocking over at least one of the California "Big Three" this year.

I am curious to know which one Phelan will pick on—California, Stanford or Southern California.

According to reports from the Northwest, Mr. Phelan may have his hands full with enemies in his own territory without laying plans to disconcert foreign opposition.

It seems that in the course of a speech Mr. Phelan referred rather disparagingly to the Washington Staters as "cow college boys."

Naturally, this went right home to the Staters, and they are reported to have their minds made up to lick one particular foe this year.

And that foe's name is mentioned often in Pullman, home of W.S.C.

ABOUT OPENING PLAYS

AN INTERESTING question came up during a fanning bee the other day.

What is the favorite opening play after the kick-off of California, Stanford and Southern California?

Well, answering the last one first, I would say that Jones likes to have his boys kick off, hold for downs, get the ball and quick kick the enemy into dangerous territory.

This quick kick has been a Trojan feature for several years.

It was used successfully with Don Williams at the helm, and last year either Duffield or Shaver employed it to splendid advantage.

Remember Uansa's 68-yard run almost to the Trojan goal line in the New Year's game, how Pitt was held and the ball was passed over the S.C. goal line, brought out to the 20-yard line, and after a peck or two at the line was quick kicked over the heads of the secondary defense, rolling to the Pitt 5-yard line, where Tappaan dropped Walinchus.

However, I don't believe S. C. has emphasized an opening offensive play as has California with Benny Lom the past three years or Stanford with Biff Hoffman heaving forward passes.

There's no use in recalling Lom's 85-yard run to a touchdown against the Trojans at the Coliseum last year. That's a sad moment in any Trojan's life. It was the Bear's first offensive effort after holding the Trojans on the goal line. The same play was pulled against Georgia Tech at the Rose Bowl the previous New Year's Day game. It worked for 36 yards—but no touchdown.

With Hoffman on the sending end Stanford used to feature an attack that called for a long pass down the field on the first play of the game. Or a favorite Warner reverse, such as sent Dick Hyland cantering over the line after a 46-yard run in the California-Stanford game of 1926.

BRAVEN DYER TO BROADCAST FOOTBALL GAMES OVER KHJ

When Don Lee Station KHJ goes on the air this fall with its famous football broadcasts from the Coliseum in Los Angeles, from Palo Alto or the Rose Bowl Braven Dyer of the sports staff of the Los Angeles Times will be at the microphone giving the play-by-play story of the gridiron classics.

Dyer was selected from a group of eligibles as one of the outstanding authorities on Pacific Coast football and the man to bring the picture from the field of play into your home with a vivid description that will leave no question in the mind of the football fan of just what actually goes on in formations and during the minutes of play.

The grid broadcast will start September 27 with the U.S.C.-U.C.L.A. game at the Coliseum, this contest officially opening the Pacific Coast Conference season. In addition to offering the outstanding Pacific Coast game of the week each Saturday, KHJ will continue its policy of bringing to local fans the most important eastern contests on a morning broadcast.

AZTEC STARS MAY NOT RETURN

Jack Wilson and Bill McCrary Figure on Dropping Out of San Diego State; Walter Herreid Starts Career as College Football Coach on 15th Inst.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 6.—Faced with the possibility that several of the outstanding letter men will not return to college, Walter B. Herreid, the first new football coach San Diego College has had in almost a decade, will launch his career as an Aztec mentor when he gathers his squad together the 15th inst. in preparation for its first 1930 Southern California Conference game with Pomona.

Herreid, who relieves Charles E. Peterson, who has relinquished his gridiron duties to become dean of physical education, formerly handled the football destinies of Huntington Park High School. During his career as prep coach he turned out several formidable championship teams that were leading contenders for the Southland crown.

Eight and possibly ten letter men are expected to greet the new tutor a week from Monday, the following veterans being practically certain to report: Percy Allen, 170-pound end; Art Kelly, 200-pound tackle; John Yamamoto, 155-pound halfback; Clayton Murdock, 170-pound guard; Bill Rumsey, 190-pound guard; Gordon Cox, 185-pound tackle; Bill Robinson, 175-pound center, and Elden Dilley, 175-pound fullback, who played at State three years ago and perhaps is the most famous of all Aztec ball toters.

Jack Wilson, a shifty and fleet-footed back, who paired up with his brother, Art Wilson, last year as two of San Diego's main threats, may be lost to the squad, although there is a remote possibility that he may return. Art and another member of the Wilson family, Harlan, who also made his letter in the backfield last year, have completed their college careers, but Jack still has two more years. The latter, however, expects to leave for a college in North Carolina, where an uncle is a member of the faculty. He is only a junior, so two more seasons of track, football and basketball await him, as he is an all-around athlete.

Another letter man, who may not return to the ranks is Bill McCrary, who was one of Dilley's running-mates three years ago. McCrary recently decided to re-enter State, but it now is doubtful whether he will do so because of present business connections.

Should the pair decide to enlist again as members of the team, Herreid will have a fairly complete set of backfield performers.

An imposing list of letter men was lost through graduation, transfer and for other reasons. Theron Cline, fullback, is abroad; Art Wilson, fullback; Capt. Don Ault, guard; Werner Peterson, tackle; Harlan Wilson, halfback, and John Montgomery, tackle, all have graduated. Alan Belmont, guard, has transferred to Stanford; Charlie Smith, quarterback; Jim Hildreth, guard; Hal Hansen, end, have completed their four years of college, and Paul Shea, tackle, has dropped out for year, but probably will be back in 1931.

A number of last year's frosh players, some former ineligibles and 1929 varsity substitutes will be available to plug the gaps. From the ranks of the freshmen will come the following candidates: Glen Tulley, guard; Fletcher Carr, tackle, Arnold Fleet, end; E. Hershberg, tackle; Vernon Schraeder, end; Mike Dillon, end; Joe Butcher, tackle; Pete Walker, 180-pound triple-threat fullback; Ed White, guard; Charles Scott, tackle; Jasper Bell, guard; Bill Gibbs, end, and Clayton Mosher, halfback.

Of this group, Walker is the most formidable, the husky fullback having stood out among the outstanding ground gainers last year.

"Red" Clark, a fast-stepping 150-pound quarterback, who was ineligible during the last season, Glenn Warren, center; Bud Yates, a halfback; Jack Hoheisal, end, and Bob Tucker, end on the frosh team of 1928, are expected to augment the turnout of nonletter men considerably.

Johnnie Yamomoto, the Japanese halfback who injured his knee two years ago and never has been just the same since, is reported improved somewhat, and during the coming campaign he will have a brother, Paul, also a back, working beside him. Paul, a 160-pounder, is said to be fast and shifty with possibilities of developing into a clever ball carrier.

The Red Devils will have a nine-game schedule, six of the tussels being night affairs on the local Navy Field gridiron, which is being lighted this season. The Aztecs' complete schedule follows:

September 25—San Diego vs. undetermined service team at Navy Field (night.)
October 4—At Pomona.
October 11—Cal Christian here (night.)
October 17—Occidental at Rose Bowl (night.)
October 25—La Verne here (night.)
November 1—Whittier here (night.)
November 8—Redlands here (night.)
November 15—Submarine Division here.
November 25—Caltech here.

Hockey Stars will Commence Work Thursday

Some fifty ice hockey players swing into their opening workouts of the season starting next Thursday morning at the Winter Garden Ice Palace. The Garden officially opens its doors for the coming year on Wednesday night.

All four managers of the Southern California Hockey League are busy lining up their squads and each looks forward to a banner year. Al Claman, manager of the Union Oil Pirates, signed Herb White, Johnny Brown, Dale Fritze and Jimmy Smart, former Ballard stars, to contracts. Ted Le Roy, the Gilmore Lion prexy, is dickering with several well-known northern boys.

"Doc" Claman, popular goalie of the Pirates, was awarded a franchise and is also busy arranging for a good strong club. One more club to be picked will compose the league.

At the first meeting of the year held last night the local managers re-elected Robert Rehms president of the circuit. They also decided to start play in the loop on Thursday night, October 16. Forty-eight games will be played this year on Monday, Thursday and Saturday nights.

Two exhibition games prior to the opening of the loop will be played on October 2 and 6. This will give the managers a chance to look over their material.

OCEAN PARK CLUB TO TRY FOUR-ROUND GAME

The Ocean Park Club will take a whirl at the old four-round game Wednesday night when a card of seven four-round bouts will be staged. Promoter Claude Bridges has made no effort to grab boxers with outstanding reputations, but has lined up a program of club fights. The bouts are: Kid Valdon vs. Tomasco Archnastegini, 160 pounds; Bobby Garcia vs. Frisco Linda, 118 pounds; Tony Cadena vs. Lorens Navarra, 150 pounds; Andy De Young vs. Battling Dozier, 165 pounds; Jack Slager vs. Manuel Victoria, 150 pounds; Verle Whitehead vs. Charlie Parks, 145 pounds; Jess Gabucco vs. Jim Barba, 124 pounds.

HOLLYWOOD, TOILERS TO MEET LONG BEACH POLY

LONG BEACH, Sept. 7. (Exclusive)—Two Los Angeles elevens will test the power of Long Beach Poly before the Southern California prep champions start the Coast League chase on October 11 against Compton.

Vic Kelly's Hollywood gridders will invade Burchman Field Friday, the 26th inst., while Manual Arts will be host to the Jackrabbits on the following Friday. Both Los Angeles squads held Long Beach to deadlocks last year, following which the locals went on to win the Coast League and Southland championships.

With five days of conditioning behind them, the Jackrabbits stack up as fleet but not as sturdy as last year's squad. Coach Orian Landreth has been concentrating on the lineup during the past week since he is well fortified with backfield talent.

A high-powered backfield holds Long Beach hopes. Capt. Russell Street at quarter, Ex-Captain Red Franklin and Johnny Morrow at halves, Cecil Storay or Ralph Bradley at full is the all-veteran backfield ready for duty. "Musty" Olson and Bob Parke will be missed from last year's ball-packing department, but the five vets listed above promise to form a better-balanced offense.

ALVIN REBOIN CAPTAINS SANTA ANA GRID ELEVEN

SANTA ANA, Sept. 7. (Exclusive) Santa Ana High School will have a "representative eleven" in the Coast League this year. Neither gloomy nor optimistic, Coach Tex Oliver last week mobilized his Saint forces Thursday afternoon to find his work well cut out for him.

Chief among the returning stars is Capt. Alvin Reboin, all-Coast League halfback for the past two years. The stocky youngster was a riot last year and promises to be more elusive than ever in his senior year. Two other tried veterans will be seen in the backfield. Harold Pangle and Don Crumley, each of whom have put in two years under Oliver, bolster offensive hopes.

"Toy" Blower and Hideo Higashi are set to take over the end berths unless it is found necessary to move either or both into the backfield. Jim Daneri, a member of Santa Ana's State championship track squad, is expected to use his speed to good advantage at end also.

The rest of the line has been wrecked by graduation. Bill Donohue is the only experienced tackle on the list, while Dallas Reichstein is the leading candidate for guard. In Joe Preininger and Lawrence Lutz, Coach Oliver expects to develop two tackles or guards who will soon measure up to first-string snuff.

Oliver's greatest task is to find a center to replace Wayne Vance, backs to fill the brogans of Norman Paul and Lloyd Nuzum; guards to plug the gaps left by Bruce Tarver, Harold Long and John Jamison; a tackle like Harry Clayton and an end to make the folks forget Asa Herren. Graduation losses were many, but Oliver is depending much on the improvement of "hold-over" material.

COMPTON LINE WILL BE WEAK

Forward Wall is Problem for Tartar Coaches

A fast, heavy backfield behind a rather weak line is the way the Compton Junior College football team will line up, according to Coach "Deacon" Pine. Only one letter man is returning for duty on the forward wall, which means that Frank Anthony, former Trojan tackle, who will be line coach at the Tartar school this year, will have a big job on his hands.

All four of the backfield letter men are returning to Eddie Sugrett, backfield coach. Capt. "Pup" McKee, fullback; Howard Kruger and Ralph Rich, halfbacks, and Tom Yancey, quarterback, will be out battling for their old positions, but it will not be surprising to see some of them spend quite a bit of time on the bench. Yancey ranks as the best quarterback in the Jaysee conference and should be a fixture at his position.

Several prep stars have enrolled at Compton and will make it tough for the veterans. Frank Schneller, all-Honor League quarterback at Roosevelt, Skaps, a halfback from Bell, and Dell Caulfield.

A former Compton boy returns to his old haunts in the person of Bovee, formerly of Augusta Military Academy of West Virginia. Bovee lives in Compton and attended Compton High, but has spent the last three years at the military school. He weighs 180 pounds and should hold down the center berth. Another candidate for center is Prosser, former San Pedro High star.

John McLaren, who played on the Henning High School in Hollister for the championship of Northern California, has also enrolled and will be out for a line berth. McLaren weighs 185 pounds, has a good pair of legs and arms and should become a sensation under the tutelage of Anthony and Pine.

BRUINS CHANGE TO POWER

Westwood Football Eleven Switches Tactics as Husky Gridders Become Eligible

Power will be the keynote of the offensive operations of the U.C.L.A. football team this fall, marking a change in tactics at the Bruin university. The change is actuated by the graduation of a number of husky gridders from frosh to varsity competition.

In previous years, Spaulding has relied more on deception than sheer strength to gain yardage against the enemy, and will not entirely forsake that policy this year, since the change is not so much a change as it is an enlargement of policy. Buddy Forster, elusive little halfback who jumped into the headlines two years ago as a sophomore when he returned a kick-off 97 yards through the whole Stanford eleven to a touchdown; Jack Bryan, another tricky, shifty runner; Leonard Bergdahl, star quarter of the 1928 frosh eleven, and Earle Painter, transfer and former Long Beach Poly star, compose a quartet that will be used in trick reserves.

The "white hope" of "Bunker Bill" Spaulding this year will be Bob Decker, former Fremont High School star. Decker looked so good in the only game he played last year with Freddy Oster's yearlings, the game in which he was injured, that all the campus sideline experts are predicting a brilliant future for him. Decker's shoulder ligaments were badly torn last fall when his shoulder pads slipped, and a complicated operation was necessary to put the shoulder in working order. Whether it will stand up in grid conflict remains to be seen.

The power in the Bruin backfield will come with the efforts of Decker, who is also a shifty broken field runner; Reuben Thoe, capable interfering back who now tips the beam at 190 pounds; Norman Duncan, who starred at the fullback position last year and who won the all-around championship in the spring grid competition, 185 pounds; Eddie (King) Solomon, captain and 185-pound quarter or half; Howie Roberts, 180-pounder who excels at punting and is also a good ball lugger, and Bob Flavelle, 205-pound fullback from the frosh who may, however, be shifted into the line. Guttormsen, whose brother captained the University of Washington eleven five or six years ago, is also an outstanding candidate, weighing 175 pounds.

These backfield aces will be aided in power plays by the heaviest and by reputation, the toughest line in Bruin grid history, and, it may be added, the greenest. However, with Jim Bruder, former Wisconsin grid star and coach, on the job this year as line coach at U.C.L.A., it is hoped that the green linemen will develop. Spaulding himself says that he will have a tough bunch of pigskinners by the latter half of the season.

Among the outstanding Bruin candidates for the forward wall are Ed Batlis, transfer from Stanford and a 190-pound tackle; "Pat" Norfleet, 235-pound tackle; Howard Willoughby, 208-pound tackle; Wilbur Higgins, 190-pound guard; Meyer Zimmerman, 200-pound guard; Homer Oliver, 200-pound center; Leonard Wellendorf, 180-pound end, and Arthur Waldron, 175-pound end candidate who transferred to U.C.L.A. from Berkeley.

Registration of old and new students takes place Friday and Saturday of this week at Westwood, and the first football practice of the year will come a week from tomorrow.

GEORGE LYON WINS

TORONTO, Sept. 6. (AP)—George S. Lyon of Lambton, Ont., who won the Canadian senior golf championship this week for the tenth time, captured the individual championship of North America today with a 75 over a par 73 course. D. N. Tallman of Minneapolis was runner-up with a 77.

BULLOCK'S STORES FOR MEN

Not both pairs at once?

The idea is rather startling. Not to say erratic. But it is being done—as you can see for yourself.

"Are you so modest that you have to wear 2 trousers, frosh?" asks the amazed sophomore in the right foreground.

"No, sir," modestly replies the frosh at the left. "But there is nothing so good and satisfactory as a 2 trouser suit in these wild pledging, paddling times, if you know what I mean!"

And there is something in that, no doubt.

This way to college:

Whatever other virtues you may find in the extra trousers, remember this about every 2-trouser suit in Bullock's Sportswear Store for Men: You have a fresh suit, with newly creased trousers always ready to put on. The suit waits for no presser. And two trousers wear twice as long as one trouser. $39.50 buys a hand tailored university model, including the popular new snowflake tweeds. $42.50 buys an even better suit. $29.50 fits the smaller fellow in authentic fashion. These 3 prices are so unusually low, and the suits are so unusually fine, that you should plan to select one and have it fitted when you come in to see the suits Monday morning.

COCHRANE'S HOMER GIVES MACKS VICTORY IN TENTH

Gehrig Wallops His Thirty-eighth Circuit Clout as Yanks Win Duel from Solons, 3 to 2

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 6. (AP)—Lefty Grove, southpaw pitcher of the Athletics, turned in his twenty-fifth triumph of the season today when the world's champions defeated Boston, 3 to 1, in ten innings.

Mickey Cochrane hit a home run with two out and Dykes on first in the final inning, breaking up a 1-1 tie waged by Lisenbee against the serving of Shores in seven innings and Grove for three.

Grove went into the box in the eighth, struck out three and didn't permit a hit. It was the left-hander's third victory in the sweep of four games over the Red Sox.

Phil Todt scored Boston's only run when he hit Shores for a homer in the fifth. Score:

CARDS COLLECT

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 6. (AP)—Cincinnati's inability to win at Sportsman's Park this season again held good as the Reds were defeated by the Cardinals today, 9 to 4. It was the ninth consecutive victory for St. Louis against Cincinnati here this year and the Reds have not had much more luck at home, winning three out of eleven played there against the Cards at Redland Field. Jim Bottomley hit a home run.

The Cardinals remain four games behind the league-leading Cubs, who won from Pittsburgh, but the Giants virtually caught up with them by taking a double-header from Boston. St. Louis leads their rivals by a single percentage point.

FERRELL BOWS TO TED LYONS

Indian Ace Defeated After Thirteen Wins in Row

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (AP)—Teddy Lyons's right arm and bat combined with the "13" win today to snap the great victory string compiled by Wesley Ferrell, Cleveland pitching ace.

Unseated in thirteen straight games, Ferrell hooked up in a mound duel with Lyons in the first game of a double-header with the White Sox today and Lyons won, 2 to 1. The Indians won the second game, 4-2.

Lyons not only held the Indians to seven scattered hits, but he won the ball game with a triple which netted a score when Reynolds singled. It was Lyons's twentieth victory of the season and it was the first defeat for Ferrell since July 4, when Detroit beat him in a ten-inning game. Mel Harder held the White Sox in check during the second game, giving them eight hits while his mates bagged eleven.

SARMIENTO GETS GO WITH BABY DEMPSEY

Having won from Canto Robleto last week by a technical knockout, Pete Sarmiento, Filipino bantam, will take on Baby Jack Dempsey in the final eight-round bout of this week's show at the Pasadena Arena. Baby Jack, 18-year-old Alhambra schoolboy, is declared to have a style more nearly approaching that of the one and only Jack Dempsey than any other boy in the ring.

The four-round semifinal will bring Billy Wagner and Paul Drake together. They are 170-pounders. The supporting card follows: Mickey McLaughlin vs. Harry Patrick O'Hanigan, 150 pounds; Jimmy Alives vs. Joe Salvivar, 135 pounds; Curley Muniz vs. Young Ralph, 126 pounds, and Eddie Vea vs. Young Murphy, 138 pounds.

KLEIN AND TERRY AFTER NATIONAL LEAGUE MARKS

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—The current National League season has every prospect of being another year of record-breaking batting feats with one of the marks set last season already shattered and more ready to fall.

Hack Wilson, husky slugger of the Chicago Cubs, has carried his new home run mark to forty-six, three above the record Chuck Klein of Philadelphia set last year, and leads both leagues, according to the averages released today, which include Thursday's games.

Klein, with one record lost, is close to another. He has hit fifty doubles, just two below the modern mark made last season by Johnny Frederick of Brooklyn and six behind the all-time mark set by Ed Delehanty of Philadelphia in 1899. Led by Wilson, the Chicago Cubs already have clouted 143 home runs and are threatening the Phillies' 1929 total of 183.

Bill Terry, league-leading batter, also may break a record if he can continue his current hitting pace. Terry has made 222 hits in 132 games to gain his current average of .407, and may yet pass the 254 total Frank O'Doul of Philadelphia made last season.

Terry has kept his average well above the .400 mark and leads his nearest rivals in the batting race, Klein and Babe Herman of Brooklyn, by eighteen points. They are tied for second at .389. Other leaders among the regulars are O'Doul, Philadelphia, .380; Stephenson, Chicago, .380; P. Waner, Pittsburgh, .368; Lindstrom, New York, .367; Traynor, Pittsburgh, .367; Cuyler, Chicago, .364, and Watkins, St. Louis, .363.

RAY JACOBS TRAILED BY TOUGH LUCK

Injuries Have Cost Angel Infielder Chance in Majors

Staff Artist Bruce Russell's Conception of Seraph Star

BY BOB RAY

SOME people are born lucky, they say, and others have luck thrust upon them. Ray Jacobs, the subject of this yarn, doesn't come under either of those classifications.

In fact Jake, who is now playing a bang-up game at first base for Jack Lelivelt's Angels, has had mostly tough luck during his seven-year stretch in the national pastime.

When Jacobs first joined the Seraphs back in 1923 he looked like a cinch to land in the majors. But every time he worked himself up into a position where it seemed inevitable for him to make the step into big show he came up with a serious injury and had to start all over again.

The jinx started trailing him in 1924 when Washington Park was the home of the Angels. Ray was going great at third base for Marty Krug's club when he was "beaned" by one of Bill Prough's fast ones and put out of the game for most of the season. Jake's career came mighty close to ending that day for the ball struck him over the ear and things looked bad for him for a while. One of his ear drums was fractured by the blow.

However, Jake started all over again in 1925 and was going along fine until he turned an ankle sliding and had to go on the shelf again for another stretch.

Ray escaped without an injury in 1926 but went into one of the worst slumps you could wish on anybody. Jake was moved over to first base that season and he fielded perfectly but he couldn't get a hit for love nor money. At that, the Angels won the pennant in a breeze.

In 1927 Ray moved back to third base again and was having his best season of all. He was batting around .340 and hitting plenty of long ones. Then up at San Francisco on July 4 Jake was having a big day. After hitting two homers earlier in the game, Ray had to make a slide into third base. He got there safely but his leg snapped as he hit the bag. It was a bad fracture and Jake was out the rest of the season. To get the tendons back in place Ray had to let Dr. Early, the Los Angeles club physician, drive a spike through his ankle to keep the ligaments from shrinking.

The Cubs had been having third-base troubles that year and Jake would probably have been called up to help them before the season ended if he hadn't suffered that broken leg.

At that the Cubs took Jacobs in the spring of 1928 but his leg took a long time mending and he had trouble moving around. He was too slow for big league infield work and finally shunted to Toledo, then Minneapolis and finally back to the Angels.

Before he broke his leg Jake would have made good with the Cubs. But that was just another tough break.

Jake started his baseball career on the Salt Lake sandlots and the first club he played with was Ogden in the Utah State League, a circuit not in organized ball. It was while with Ogden in 1923 that Doc Crandall went over and scouted him, pronounced him okeh and the Angels signed him. He joined the Cherubs in the fall of 1923 and proved a good hitter in the games he played in that year. Then the jinx got after him.

Ray says he got his biggest thrill out of baseball in a game at Salt Lake in 1924. The Angels were trailing the Bees by eight runs in the sixth, when Jake was sent up as a pinch-hitter. He hit a home run and Clyde Beck, also breaking in then, followed with another pinch-hit homer. That started the Seraphs and they managed to tie the score and run the game into extra innings.

Finally in the twelfth Ray came up with a man on and banged out another homer. The Bees got a run in their half but the Angels won, 12 to 11. Jake got a big kick out of those two homers because they were made in his old home town.

Right now Jacobs is playing a much better game at first base than a lot of fans give him credit for. He's one of the reasons why the Angel infield is as steady as it is. Jake is a good target for the infielders to throw at and Seraph players say he comes up with throws that Slug Tolson never even tried for last year. He had a hard time getting started hitting but his average is up around the .300 mark now and still ascending.

Jake believes that he has finally handed old Kid Jinx a knockout wallop and still thinks he has a good chance to work his way to another trip to the majors. He's still a young fellow, as game as they make 'em, a hustler and deserving of a few good breaks to make up for the hard knocks that fate dealt him on the diamond.

Solons Crush Indians, 15-3

SEATTLE (Wash.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Pounding Zahniser and Freetas for a dozen runs in the seventh and eighth innings, the Sacramento Solons clinched an early lead here today to beat the Seattle Indians, 15 to 3. Score:

HOT TIME FOR WRIGLEY FIELD THIS WEEK; STARS AND SERAPHS TO TANGLE

BY BOB RAY

The "piece de resistance" in a local baseball way—a civil-war series between the Hollywood Stars and Los Angeles Angels—for which Wrigley Field fans have been waiting ever since the second half got under way and the two home clubs started dominating the race, provides the fireworks here this week.

Oscar Vitt's leading Sheiks and Jack Lelivelt's second-place Seraphs, who already have a first-half victory to their credit, start the excitement at Wrigley Field Tuesday with an Admission Day twin bill with the first game taking place in the afternoon and the afterpiece under the arcs. This will mark the first time that an afternoon and a night contest have been scheduled on the same day at Wrigley Field and it will be interesting to see how the fans take to it.

The Stars, who have been strutting at the expense of the lowly Mission Reds during the past two series to pull away from the Angels and Seals, will be favorites to trim their local rivals, but a hot bunch of battles are expected to take place. Hollywood has been hitting the high spots in its drive for a second-half crown and boasts an array of sluggers that are mighty hard to stop.

ANGELS CRIPPLED

On the other hand, Skipper Lelivelt's Cherubs are pretty badly crippled and it is doubtful whether Johnny Moore, Carl Dittmar and Frank Sigafoos will be able to get into the line-up for the series against the Sheiks. At full strength the Cherubs figure to be able to take care of themselves against any club in the circuit, but with their keystone combination and star left fielder out with injuries they are in bad shape.

Both clubs are battling aggregations and apparently try to outdo themselves when playing against each other. The Angels have an edge in the pitching department, but the Stars have so much more of an attack that it will take great hurling to stop them.

Because of the holiday twin bill Tuesday, the civil-war series will be an eight-game affair. If the weather continues as perfect as it has been last week a record attendance for the series is expected to turn out to watch the Sheiks and Seraphs do their stuff.

Both clubs have a big local following and the fans are expected to be out in force to cheer their favorites.

In the two previous meetings of the Stars and Angels this season, Los Angeles won the verdict in both series by four-two and five-three counts. The Sheiks were crippled in those engagements, but now will have a chance to get revenge while the Seraphs are shot with injuries.

Other series starting Tuesday bring together the Seals and Missions at San Francisco, the Indians and Solons at Sacramento and the Ducks and Oaks at Oakland.

This arrangement should give the Seals a chance to gain on the Angels and Stars for the Reds are playing terrible ball and dropping fast.

YANKS ANNEX

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (AP)—The Yankees won their final game from Washington today when Charley Ruffing had a shade the better of Lloyd Brown in a mound duel. The score was 3 to 2 and was the fifth New York victory in the season's twenty-two games.

Lou Gehrig contributed a large share of the Yankee hitting with his thirty-eighth home run of the season in the second and an important single in the fourth which led to the second Yankee run after Joe Judge's homer in the same inning had tied the score. Score:

Killefer Gives Up and Puts in Rookie Infield

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Hollywood gave the Missions their daily dose today, beating them, 12 to 4, making five in a row the league leaders have taken here this week. They have won eleven of the last fourteen games played with the Missions.

Red Killefer took out Mulligan, Monroe, Hodda, Burns and Hoffman in the sixth inning and used Tarbarian, a young Persian kid of 17, at first base; Joe Coscarart, a fledgling, at short; Montague, another beardless youth, at second; Wright, a high-school boy, at third, and Walgren, a kid catcher, behind the bat.

That left Fuzzy Hafftt as the only experienced fellow in the line-up. He was kept in there to pull the deep stuff, apparently.

Jack Knott started for the Missions. He got by unhurt in the first two innings, but was knocked out of the box in the third and Derrough, a left-hander, finished the game. Knott stopped the hitting streak of Mickey Heath, however. Mickey and his toils were in the game again today and he fouled out to Hoffman his first time up. He had made twelve hits in succession this week, establishing a record for the Coast League. He got a hit his next time up, but the sequence had been broken.

Shellenback began the attack in the third with a single Hill was walked and Lee bent out a bunt to fill the bases. Brannan was walked, forcing in one run and Barbee and Carlyle singled. Knott then was lifted and Heath singled off Darrough. Before the side was retired Hollywood scored six runs and was never in danger thereafter.

Monroe singled inflied in the fourth and George Burns followed with a home run into the bleachers, to give the Missions a start.

Hollywood hit Darrough freely and picked up a run in the fifth, two in the sixth, one more in the seventh and two in the ninth.

Joe Coscarart whacked a home run in the eighth, while Wright doubled in the ninth and scored on two infield outs to account for the other two Red tallies. Score:

Brown Turns Down N.Y. Scrap to Meet Chato Laredo in Olympic Ring Tuesday Night

Newsboy will Stand by as Losers Mix for Crown

Jewish Star Has Win Over Jewish Boxer

BY KAY OWE

Mickey Brown—admittedly the best featherweight in the country—is out of the running for championship honors in the ring row.

The Jewish newsboy is forced to stand by while the two boys he has beaten, Midget Wolgast and Frankie Genaro, fight for the world's championship in New York October 17, next.

The Madison Square Garden people have offered him the consolation of a semi-wind-up on the card, He is also to be an alternate, but no accepts.

Chances of cashing in as alternate are slight, since Mickey seldom if ever injure himself to trainer.

SECOND CHOICE

Brown is doing the next best thing in fighting Chato Laredo Mexican Jack Doyle's Olympic Auditorium tonight, Laredo being a favorite for Genaro, who ran out after Wolgast lost here. Brown figures to give Brown a more or more opposition than would have done. Brown went to Mexico to box an unknown, is was guaranteed the money. Brown any kind of a cash offer, agreed was Laredo, a little guy who had just won the fly-weight championship in Mexico City.

Brown drew an audience composed mostly of his countrymen. The decision after ten rounds of fighting in which it is said there wasn't a single clinch. Both men on the floor once.

It is said that Laredo gave Brown the opposition that the New York champion, Izzy Schwed here recently, amid quite a protest. The fight resulted in the referee, Ray Vallis, being suspended tonight is in the books as a draw.

Another Mexican fighter from the south, Baby Casanova, knocked down Mickey Brown was much like Brown and Wolgast got over on Mickey was up with-

"KLES" HINTZ BOXES RUDENZSKI WEDNESDAY

FRANK T. HARVEY

Junior heavyweight champion of the world will make his debut at the Wilmington Bowl next Wednesday night—that is, if you take the word of some 20,000 sailors of the United States Battle Fleet — based at Los Angeles Harbor.

The future champion is none other than Ad (Pickles) Hintz, present all-navy heavyweight from the U.S.S. Idaho, belt at Guantanamo, last April when Flinker, pride of navy, fought before a crowd of more than 20,000 blue-jackets, before his professional debut in the arena Wednesday night. The round bout with Rudenzski, and he will have plenty of supporters from the fleet on hand to see him in his first fight ashore.

Navy fight fans declare Hintz a far better prospect than was Jack Sharkey when the latter was monarch of the navy scrappers and are confident that within another two years he will be king of the big fellows.

In reven fights Hintz has scored five knockouts and won two decisions. He won the navy title in his fifth ring appearance and all of his bouts have been against fighters of experience.

He gained considerable recognition last December when he won the battle fleet title by pounding out a six-round win over Ray Spiker despite the fact that he was handicapped from the first round on with a broken jaw.

In addition to being a boxer Hintz is a member of the Idaho's championship race-boat crew and until this year was a lineman on the Hell Cats' football team.

Besides having a contingent of bluejackets on hand to root for him in his coming fight several Los Angeles matchmakers will sit ringside to see the promising sailor in his first start.

WHICH IS THE REAL CHAMPIONSHIP MATCH?

If Newsboy Brown and Chato Laredo box at 112 pounds instead of 114 Tuesday night at the Olympic the bout would carry more title prestige than the Midget Wolgast-Frankie Genaro shot in New York slated for October 17. Laredo beat Brown at Juarez last June. Brown whipped Wolgast here in August, and also holds two decisions over Genaro. The crown teeter-totter shows Genaro and Wolgast (left,) and Brown and Laredo, right.

United States "Devil Dogs" Prove Best Marksmen

CAMP PERRY (O.) Sept. 6. (AP)—The rifle team of the United States Marines won the Herrick Trophy match today at the national rifle and pistol matches here with a 1789 out of a possible 1800.

The United States Coast Guards were second with 1768, District of Columbia third with 1752, and the Ohio civilian team fourth with 1748. The firing was over the 800, 900 and 1000-yard ranges with fifteen shots at each range a man for record. There were seventy teams of eight men each.

First place in the civilian classification in this match went to the Ohio team.

In the American Legion interdepartment team match with twenty-one teams entered, the Indiana team won with a score of 830 out of a possible 900. The Ohio team was second with 819; Wyoming third with 803, and the Illinois and Washington teams fourth, each with a tie score of 801.

Eight of the best teams west of the Mississippi River defeated a like number from the East in the east-and-west team match for small-bore rifles. The winners scored 2302 out of a possible 2400, while the East team scored 2283. The East team won last year.

The Seattle (Wash.) pistol team landed in first place in the National Rifle Association pistol team match with a total of 1302 out of a possible 1500. The Portland (Or.) team was second with 1299; Los Angeles police third with 1297; Marines fourth with 1284 and Detroit police fifth with 1280.

OREGON STATE STRONG

Coach Schissler Introduces Trojan Style of Play and will Have Line Averaging About 200 Pounds

BY H. E. THOMAS

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 6.—The curtain has been raised somewhat on the so-called mystery team that Oregon State College expects to put into the Pacific Coast Conference this season.

At least the personnel that Coach Schissler depends upon is pretty well known. The mystery talk developed from the fact that details were not broadcast concerning last spring's practice on the Corvallis campus and it became noised about that Schissler had an unusual lot of good material and thought rather well of its chances to put out a first-class team this fall.

PAUL SCHISSLER

Well, it seems to be true that the Orangemen will be better off the coming season than they were last year, which was something of a let-down from the really good team of the previous year which triumphed over New York University and had its game built around that sterling player, Howard Maple. Schissler last year had a hard time replacing Maple and some of the other veterans that he had lost. Now he has the best of his 1929 material available and has the prettiest bunch of reinforcements that has turned up at Corvallis for some time. It is a mystery team in that it will include new men and new combinations, but the mystery will be dispelled early for it is due to meet Southern California as early as October 4. Even a week earlier than that it is scheduled to go up against the tough Gonzaga College outfit, so Schissler will have to get his men into their stride pretty promptly.

PLENTY OF WEIGHT

Those in the know at Corvallis say that the Oregon Staters will have more weight and power than they have had for years. There seems to be little doubt about this, for Schissler is introducing the Trojan system of play which depends largely upon a one-man ball carrier and a strong interference. It is hardly to be expected that this change would be made unless there was to be a lot of beef in the forward wall as well as power and speed in the backfield. And the best information is that this is true. The line will be the heaviest that the Aggies have had within Schissler's regime and unlike many of their lines in the past, which have been spotted with big fellows, it will be well balanced.

This may be a little early for any comprehensive review of the Oregon State material, but it will not hurt to mention some of the high spots. The main dependence at center will be Buck Hammer, an ex-high-school fullback who broke in at guard last season. He tips the scales around 195.

The 205-pound Indian Chief Thompson, whom the Aggies had at fullback for two years will be at one guard, while Jack Cox, another ex-fullback, who admits 185 pounds and looks larger, has first call on the other guard berth. At least that is the official dope, but one of the mystery rumors concerns a lad named Gilbert Bergerson, who weighs a mere 220 pounds and is said to be a regular pile-driver, although there has been a real effort to cover up on information about Bergerson.

For tackles Schissler has Harry Kent, 205, on one side and Pete Miller, 210, on the other. Miller was on the squad last year but was kept out of the games by a sore shoulder, which has now been cured. Also Fred Schell, a Californian, six feet six inches tall, weight, 220 pounds, is going to return. He played two years ago, but was out last year because of illness.

A mystery boy at end is Reginald Rust of Santa Ana, Cal., who is officially listed as an alternate, but is considered sure-fire for a regular berth. Rust was at Eastern Oregon Normal for a year and the entire eastern half of the State talked about his sensational ability. He is listed at 185 pounds, but is likely heavier. The other end is sure to be Bill McKalip, a veteran and 175 pounds, a great player. The official list puts down Arthur Gustafson, 167, as the other regular, but it is Gustafson who is expected to give way to Rust.

With a line averaging close to 200 pounds, there will be fine charging ability for a fast backfield. As a ball carrier Cecil Sherwood, who for two years has just fallen short of all-Coast honors, is expected to star. Sherwood was injured both seasons, but will start 1930 in fine shape. His running mate will be Rowdy Kerr, an ex-Portland High School lad who will be used for interference. Hal Moe of Montana, a 1929 freshman, and something of a mystery man himself, will give both power and speed to the backfield. Moe is 190 pounds and ought to be a wonderful interfering back.

At fullback is Frank Little, also 190 pounds, a freshman last year and the sensation of Oregon State's freshman game against the University of Oregon. Little is an Italian and last year nosed a draw bout with Moe for the heavyweight boxing championship of the school. And there is another Italian, Art Ramponi, 160, who is going to give Ralph Buerke, quarter for the past two years, a hard fight for his job.

That is by no means a complete roster of first-string prospects at Oregon State. But it is enough to indicate that Schissler is at least conservative when he admits cautiously that he expects to have a better team than he did last year.

Coleman, Southern California champion, held a 1 up lead for the morning round. His medal score was 36-37—73 while Eichelberger had a 37-37—74. Eichelberger, less experienced in tournament play, captured the first hole, but it was the only time he had the upper hand. Coleman won the second to even up the contest and the third gave him a lead that was never cut down again. The two youngsters halved nineteen holes during their match, six of them in succession from the eighteenth to the twenty-third, inclusive. At the twenty-seventh, Coleman was 3 up. He shot the third nine in par 36. Eichelberger taking thirty-nine strokes.

Winning the twenty-eighth, Coleman increased his lead to 4 up; the next two holes were halved and Eichelberger won the thirty-first with a birdie 3, making an eight-foot putt. They halved the thirty-second and Coleman laid his rival a stymie on the thirty-third to pick off that hole and the match. The cards: :

MEXICAN GRIDS MUCH IMPROVED

Team 200 Per Cent Better Than in 1929

BY JACK STARR-HUNT

MEXICO CITY, Sept. 6.—A University of Mexico gridiron team that is a 200 per cent improvement over that which last fall introduced international football into the annals of American sport will battle Occidental at the Coliseum in Los Angeles the night of the 26th inst, unless early observations on the practice field here are wrong.

Coach Reginald D. Root, the former Yale tackle, is working his fledglings from the University of Mexico overtime in order to whip them into shape for the Oxy contest, which is to inaugurate the season for both Mexico and the California institution. Six days a week the warriors from south of the Rio Grande are strenuously working out on a field near the National Stadium in Mexico City. Coach Root has stressed fundamentals from the beginning and is now devoting much effort toward speading up the charge of his line, which may weigh as much as 185 pounds from end to end.

That the Mexico team is imbued with the Yale fighting spirit is not to be denied, but the Yale style of play, which centers on sheer power and super charging to sweep the opponents off their feet, is being modified somewhat. Coach Root found that the University of Mexico men are unusually adept at the aerial game and are clever in executing fake plays. Now the Yale man is stressing line play in order to frame a well-balanced offense.

FOOTBALL BLUES IN VOGUE AT OCCIDENTAL

Football blues are in vogue at Occidental.

Nine stellar players of last year's varsity are lost to the 1930 aggregation, the almost Herculean task of building practically an all new team in eleven days is faced at Occidental this year by Coach Edgar H. Klenhols and his chief aide, Bill Anderson. Football practice starts the 15th inst. and on Friday evening, the 26th inst., the Oxy warriors stage their international football battle against the National University of Mexico in the Coliseum.

The sextet of big "O" wearers lost through graduation include Al Re Hoag, end; Ed Beebe, tackle; Wendell Smith, end; Glenn Roselle, half; Charles Hibbitts, guard, and Ed Carrey, end. Four of this group, De Hoog, end; Ed Beebe, tackle; bitts, were all-conference stars. Bud Collier, half, was declared ineligible by the faculty in June and Jerry Chappel, center and captain, is doubtful as to his eligibility. In June he was declared out, but the summer school session he attended may alter the situation, the Oxy fans hope. Hartman Angst, guard, married and quit college.

The veteran nucleus around which the coaches will have to build the 1930 eleven takes in William Myers, last year's quarter, who may be shifted to half or even into the line; Dave Snedden, tackle; Art Elliott, fullback; Dick Glover, half, and Warren Johnston, quarter. Howard Marsh, guard; Larry Green, end; Warren Epinette, guard, and Ben Hilliard, guard, are also among the returning letter men.

JIM DAVIS CAPTURES MOTORCYCLE CROWN

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Jim Davis of Columbus, O., broke his own world record for the five-mile motorcycle race by winning that event, opener of the 1930 national championship, at the New York State Fair today. His time was 3.41:68, as compared to 3:47:42 made on the same track last year.

Andrew Hader of Cincinnati, O., was second and Walt Stoddard of Hagerstown, Md., third.

Stoddard won the second race, the ten-mile event, establishing a world record in that event. His time was 7.23:06.

GRID GOSSIP

BY BRAVEN DYER

FOOTBALL has been under way almost a week for teams of the brand-new City League, which now includes twelve schools as against seven last season. The boys got their suits Monday and by this time have had most of the kinks bumped out of their respective systems. The new schools in the circuit are Fremont, Fairfax, Belmont, Roosevelt, and Garfield, with the first three boasting plenty of students from which to build strong football teams. Clark DeGroot, former University of Southern California lineman, coaches at Roosevelt and has won the Minor City League title two years running.

SID FOSTER

STAN WILLIAMSON

Jim Blewett's Manual Arts outfit is regarded as the most powerful team in the loop. L. A. High and Hollywood look promising while Voyle Brennan will always have a tough team at Polytechnic. Incidentally Brennan and Vic Kelley at Hollywood are the only ones left of the old school of prep coaches which included such well-known gentlemen as Glenn Whittle, Herb White, Sid Foster, Ray Daugherty, Tommy Davis and others. There's a new crop now and among them we find Harry Edelson, efficient interfering halfback for Troy last year; Jim Tunney, a fine back who played at Loyola, and Horace Bresee, who used to do his stuff at U.C.L.A. Edelson is to coach at Jefferson, Tunney at Lincoln and Bresee at L. A. High, where he held forth last year.

Nobody seems to have a very good explanation as to why the two prep leagues were combined this year other than that the smaller schools, growing as they were, yelped long and loud for recognition. Hence the change. Each team will play six games and out of that scramble you will probably get a tie for the title. Inasmuch as there will be no play-off, thanks to the astute Board of Education, several teams will be able to claim the championship.

It won't be Stan Williamson's fault if he doesn't make good as center on the University of Southern California eleven this fall. The powerfully built Trojan junior is probably the most conscientious worker on the squad. During his spare time this summer Stan has been perfecting his passing aim by propelling the pigskin at various targets. He started with the regulation canvas backstop which he took home from Bovard Field. Constant practice made this chore easy and Stan sought tougher assignments. Milk bottles were lined up on his back-yard fence and Williamson sharpened his sights by knocking them down. At Stan's fraternity house he has a lot of fun snapping the lights on and off simply by shooting the football at the wall switch. If you don't think that requires skill just try it some time.

Roy Riegels is no longer at California and Walt Heinecke is through at Stanford. Which means that Williamson, with his 200 pounds of fight, should be the best center on the Coast this year. And he is likely to come close to being the best center Troy ever had.

Edwin B. Dooley, former all-American quarterback at Dartmouth, will write football for The Times this fall. Dooley, on the staff of the New York Sun, will keep local readers posted on outstanding eastern teams and players, bringing a personal touch to the sport which only a few writers are privileged to impart.

Dooley won all-American honors in 1924. The next year he stayed out, but returned in 1926. Dartmouth had another good quarterback that season, Harris by name, and Dooley, due to his layoff, didn't play as much football as he had in '24. In fact, Eddie sat on the bench so much that in the last game of the season he gave the fans a laugh by carrying a pillow with him when the team came on the field.

Merle Hufford of Washington and Johnny Kitzmiller of Oregon should be the outstanding backs in the Northwest this fall. Any team in the country would be glad to have Hufford, who gives promise of attaining all-American honors as did two other great Husky backs, George Wilson and Chuck Carroll.

When the Trojans defeated Washington, 48 to 6, in Seattle last fall, Hufford, among others was very much disgusted. The Washington situation, with Enoch Bagshaw hanging on in the face of criticism from all sides, was anything but conducive to good football.

After the game Hufford, and Bill Middlestedt, Long Beach boy, talked with several Trojan players. "We're through up here," they declared. "We'll be at Southern California next fall."

Anybody who has played football can understand how Hufford and Middlestedt felt after the crushing defeat. To many players the world almost comes to an end when their hopes are so severely crushed. Time, though, heals even football wounds and Hufford will go on under Jimmy Phelan and attain national recognition.

It will be interesting to see how Lee Elsan makes out as coach at LaVerne College here. This institution has virtually no material and if Elsan gets anywhere in the Southern California Conference he will be classed as a "Miracle Man." How he ever came to take the position is beyond me. The college is ideally situated in the citrus belt, but does not draw any material to speak of.

Recent publication of the Harvard Athletic Association points out that Crimson prospects are "distinctly above the average." And this despite the fact that eleven football players were declared ineligible by the head office. Ben Tickner, all-American center, is captain this year and Tickner is half a line in himself, which is probably one good reason for Harvard's optimism.

I see by the papers that Eugene Nixon will have a rather weak team at Pomona this year. Don't fool yourself. Mr. Nixon's able assistant, Calvin Heath, had a very efficient second-string line last year and this entire wall comes back this season. Nixon has three good backs in Putnam, Baynham and Tscharner. Who will fill the fourth position is a question, but this chap Redmond "Dum-Dum" Downs, who played fullback for the frosh last year, looks like the best bet. He weighs 180 pounds and will add just the right amount of avoirdupois to the Sagehen backfield.

NIGHT HORSE RACING ON CARD FOR COUNTY FAIR

POMONA, Sept. 6.—With $40,000 hung up in purses and with assurance received by Secretary C. B. Afflerbaugh that there will be a big string of horses here from Tia Juana to add to the large number being shipped down from the State Fair in Sacramento, keen interest is being manifested in the racing program to be offered at Los Angeles County Fair in Pomona beginning the 12th inst., and continuing for ten days through September 21. Some rare sport is promised.

The fact, that for the first time in the West night horse racing will be offered is also serving to attract wide attention. Giant flood lights have been installed al ithe way around the half-mile track so that from the grand stand the drivers and riders will be visible every moment. In fact, tests indicate that the visibility will be even better at night than in the daytime. In answer to many inquiries Secretary Afflerbaugh announces that there will be racing afternoons and evenings on both Sundays during the fair.

The Pomona track is the fastest half-mile track in the West. This year it should be speedier than ever because of the extensive work which has been done on it during the past few months. The turns have been improved and some minor defects have been corrected.

EXTENSIVE PROGRAM PLANNED FOR KERN

BAKERSFIELD, Sept. 6.—An extensive and varied program of horse racing which will not be equaled any place in the San Joaquin Valley this year has been completed for the Kern County Fair, the 24th to the 28th inst., and the total purses, including added money, will be in excess of $10,000.

The general racing program at the Kern fair will be conducted under the auspices of the Western Fairs Association and some of the finest horses on the entire circuit will compete for the prizes. Horses that will be seen only at Stockton and Pomona in the fall races have been obtained for the local races. A number of well-known stables will be represented, among these being the Giannini, Callea and Coppla, John Perata, John Lazenby, H. Campodonico and Gus Clotere, all of San Francisco, and the Shamrock, Gold Seal and Perry Stables, all of Los Angeles; the Klipstein-Owen stables of Agua Caliente, owned by Phil W. Klipstein of Bakersfield and Fred Owen of Maricopa. In addition to the outside horses and those bred and stabled in Kern county by the Klipstein-Owen stables, there will be a number of individual entries by horse lovers of Kern county, including J. H. McMackin, Lakey and Waldon, Elmer O'Connell, who is now in Canada with a string of thirty, William Baker, Clyde Hartman, Jess Powers and Robert Coates, Jr.

Rajah Rumored to Replace Joe McCarthy

Chicago Press and Fans All Hot About Idea

Club Officials Refuse to Answer Definitely

BY JOHN P. GALLAGHER

"Times" Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—Is Rogers Hornsby going to manage the Chicago Cubs next year or will Joe McCarthy continue as their pilot? This is the question that is being hotly discussed by the Chicago press and the Cub fans, which are legion. Meanwhile the rumor that McCarthy will give way to the Rajah cannot be confirmed because the officials of the club refuse to deny or confirm it. McCarthy's contract expires on January 1, next.

ROGERS HORNSBY

The report began circulating about two weeks ago that Hornsby had criticised some of McCarthy's moves in the last world series and soon it was on the tongue of every Bruin fan in town. A letter was sent to Mr. William Wrigley, Jr., who controls much of the club's stock. When no answer was received within a week, Mr. William Veeck was called on the phone. He said that the letter had been received and was turned over to him to answer and that he hadn't had time to do so up until that time.

Asked what the attitude of the officials of the club was in Nregard to the rumor that Rogers Hornsby would replace McCarthy as manager of the Cubs, Mr. Veeck said:

"Our whole interest at this time is to win the National League championship and then the world series. Beyond that we do not want to discuss any other matters pertaining to the club or to its personnel."

"Your attention certainly has been called to various news articles lately that there has been dissension on the team between Hornsby and his manager. Will you affirm or deny that?"

"No, I haven't heard that, but if I did, what could I do about it?" answered Mr. Veeck.

"It was only a few days ago that rumors came out that John McGraw was to be released as manager of the New York Giants. The Giant officials answered that rumor by saying that McGraw had just signed a contract to manage that team for five years more, which promptly and decisively squelched any further speculation on the subject. Can't you say whether or not McCarthy will be retained as the Cub pilot next year or that he intends signing another contract when the present one runs out next January?"

"I'm sorry I can't discuss the subject," answered Mr. Veeck with finality.

Asked about the reports in Pittsburgh today Manager Joe McCarthy said he knew nothing about them.

"I know from experience that a manager is often dropped like a hot potato for some reason or other. I have not heard a word from any of the club officials so there is no way I can know definitely until I am either told about when I get back to Chicago or until the subject of a new contract comes up for discussion four months hence.

"However, so far as the report says that Hornsby and I are at swords' points are concerned I can assure you that is not true. We get along as well as anyone could expect."

That Hornsby is a trouble maker this writer has in these columns iterated and reiterated; when he had charge of the New York Giants during a period when McGraw was ill, reports to the effect began to go the rounds that the Rajah was being groomed to take over the managership of the New York National League team. But when the end of the season came around Hornsby was sold to the Boston Braves. During his short tenure as manager of the Giants he almost disrupted McGraw's team.

The Rajah was traded from the Cardinals to the New York Giants after he led the Cards to their first pennant in thirty years because among his demands from Sam Breadon, owner of the St. Louis Cardinals, he wanted Breadon to oust Branch Rickey from the team because he (Hornsby) did not like him.

The subject is receiving so much publicity in the press that it seems it must soon be brought to a head, forcing a statement either from the club or McCarthy. Perhaps meanwhile Hornsby himself may have something to say.

BASS BEING HOOKED OFF SANTA MONICA

Ideal weather and wonderful fishing ushered in the fall season off Santa Monica during the last week, declared Cliff and Jack, operators of the live-bait boats Palisades, Thrush, Lark and W. K., yesterday.

Exceptionally large catches of bass have been made. Quite a number of barracuda and halibut have also been caught. Yellowtail have started to striking, several of the fighting fish being caught, the heaviest weighing seventeen pounds.

"BIG TEN" TEAMS HARD TO RANK

Zuppke Believes Purple May Prove Dangerous

Iowa Stage Comeback After Return to Fold

Antishift Legislation Not Bothering Rockne

BY BOB ZUPPKE

(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance)

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—Northwestern and Purdue in the Big Ten, Nebraska and possibly Kansas in the Big Six and Notre Dame at large look good in the Middle West as the opening of the football season impends.

BOB ZUPPKE

But guessing the Big Ten is like shooting at the moon, for it is the largest organization of big universities and the toughest football league in the country. Most of our teams are evenly matched, and old rivalries inspire us. We destroy each other's chances, and a team that emerges unscathed at the end of the season is as good as any in the land.

This year, in addition to their usual formidable Big Ten schedules, six of our teams play outstanding intersectional games, and two others play Notre Dame.

Veteran teams resting on past laurels seldom come back, because they have lost all the elixir of youth. Young teams which have this fire are dangerous, because they are likely to kick out in all directions, but they will take some bumps while gaining experience.

The best situation is a mixture of veterans and youngsters in such a number that no one is sure of a position. This provides spirit and morale. There is no special magic in any one system of coaching, for there are often several ways of doing the same thing in football. Hard running and tackling, good blocking, good kicking and clever ball-handling will be the factors that will decide our big games, just as in the past.

On preseason information I would divide the Big Ten into these groups:

THE STANDINGS

First—Northwestern and Purdue.
Second—Michigan, Illinois, Minnesota and Wisconsin.
Third—Ohio State.
Fourth—Chicago and Indiana.

As Iowa, reinstated in the good graces of the conference too late to obtain a full schedule, encounters only one Big Ten team, Purdue, the Hawkeyes, even if they win this battle, cannot be considered for the championship. But supposing they beat Purdue, will that reverse count against the present champions? There's a nice question.

With the exception of Chicago, Minnesota and Indiana, which play four Big Ten games, all the other conference teams except Iowa have five. Purdue has five in addition to Iowa.

Northwestern is likely to be knocking at the door if Dick Hanley can develop reserves. Hanley has done a good job of coaching in his three seasons, but he has had more than the usual bad luck which goes along with the game, in the form of disabilities to key men. He has plenty of veterans and some promising sophomores. His captain, Hank Bruder, crippled most of last season, should be one of the best halfbacks in the conference. Rentner, a sophomore fullback, is said to be stronger and more powerful than Bergherm, leading Big Ten fullback last year, and he fits in well with the Warner system.

Purdue, last year's champion, deserved its honors, and, in my opinion, was as good as any team in the country. Jimmy Phelan, a smart coach, has gone to Washington, but his successor, Noble Kizer, also a Notre Dame product, has been assistant coach for several years, so the transition should not create confusion.

SLEIGHT GONE

Purdue has lost a great tackle, Sleight, and two fine backs, Welch and Harmeson, but still has Yunewich, fullback, a splendid blocker. The great need will be tackles.

Purdue's schedule is not so well arranged as last year when a non-conference game before the Iowa contest was valuable, and Illinois is added. Nevertheless, I expect the Boilermakers to be contenders.

There have been no Oosterbaans and Friedmans at Ann Arbor the last few years, and the old Michigan policy, "hold 'em and wait for the breaks," has not been working so successfully, but the Wolverines will be tough nuts, I think. Coach Kipke had tough sledding at the outset last year, his first, but Michigan finished nicely, tying Iowa and beating Harvard and Minnesota, which was fine for morale.

Michigan has lost heavily in regular linemen, but eleven letter men are available for all positions, and Kipke had a fine spring practice. Poor tackling in the open was responsible for most of Michigan's woes last season, and if this is corrected the eleven will be tough.

When I observed recently that material was somewhat scant at Illinois this fall, Knute Rockne immediately asserted this meant we would have another strong team. I hope he is right. It is the fashion to discount anything a coach says about the outlook for his team, and all I can do is outline the situation. We have lost practically all the stalwart linesmen, ends and backs who lost only two games in the last three years, and we must build all over again.

Illinois has only four letter men left from last year, and at best only two can be considered regulars—Kawal, center, and Yanushus, halfback. Our old line material consists of third-stringers and players from the reserve team, all somewhat awkward and heavy, while the sophomore linemen are faster but light. We will have some fast scampering backs but it will be a task to get a line to give them a chance. Gil Berry, a sophomore, looked good as a freshman back, but you never can tell until they hit the big time.

There's a kick about working with a young squad, and I am not pessimistic.

FINE PERSONALITY

Herb Crisler, former Chicago player and assistant coach, succeeds Dr. Spears as coach at Minnesota. There were some old grad growlings when he was selected, though not against him personally, and too much importance need not be attached to this, for the big thing is to have your own boys behind you, which Crisler's personality, character and ability probably insure. But it takes time for a new coach to become acquainted with his personnel and out in his own system. Crisler had the advantage of a good spring practice, and, especially in his case, the opportunity was invaluable.

Nagurski is gone, and most of the leading linemen, but about eight of the sixteen letter men available are line players, including Apman of the 1928 squad. Brockmyer and Riebeth head a group of experienced backs, so if the sophomore material stacks up the Gophers loom strongly. Jack Manders, a sophomore fullback, if eligible, is groomed as a worthy successor of Nagurski.

Last year Wisconsin won only one conference game, which was a blow to many supporters, who unreasonably assumed the Badgers would begin where they left off in 1926, as strong contenders. Wisconsin should be better, but everything depends upon the line, the weakness last season. The Badger linemen, despite excellent coaching, simply "squatted." Coach Thistlethwaite's backs look better than his line. He has about fourteen letter men, including Behr, Sheehan and Lusby.

My guess is that Ohio State will be somewhat better than last season. Starting his second year, Coach Sam Willaman must replace more than half his team. Of the eleven players who started the last game, six are gone, including Holman, quarterback. Fesler, end, is the outstanding player among the eleven letter men. On the face of it, Willaman's prospects are not brilliant. But nearly every position on the team will be open, and with spirited competition and good morale the Buckeyes may come along better than their outlook seems to indicate just now.

MAROONS WEAK

Last year Chicago beat Washington and Princeton, but won only one Big Ten game. On paper the Maroons do not rate as well as 1929, as they have lost most of their line and are shy on sophomore material. Coach Stagg, starting his thirty-ninth season, thus faces another difficult task, but I look to see him develop a team that will be a threat, at least by November.

Chicago has lost Wattenberg, passer who made the "flanker" forward-pass play go over with such startling success, Van Nice, not the equal of Wattenberg as a thrower, will replace him in executing the play, which is the best forward-pass strategy I ever saw. The backfield material is above the average of the last four years, and everything rests on the development of a line.

Pat Page has a tough outlook at Indiana, where he has lost most of his experienced players. He has only four letter men. The Hoosiers seek some solace from the fact that they had a strong reserve team last season, and also have some likely freshmen. But the outlook is not good, and Page will be entitled to credit for anything the Hoosiers accomplish.

I believe Iowa will be better than supposed, and will have a fairly good first team, although probably shy on reserve strength. Coach Ingwersen has lost Glassgow and Pape, backs, and some good linemen, and has only five regulars. The Hawkeye sophomore backs are said to be promising.

The entire football world is glad to welcome Knute Rockne back to the job in good health. Notre Dame has lost a valuable group of regulars and reserves, including Cannon, Moynihan and Twomey, outstanding linemen, and Rockne's chief problem is his line. However, eight of his fourteen letter men available are line players.

Notre Dame's backfield looks good, with such material as Carideo, Savoldi and Brill as a nucleus. The great strength of the Irish has been the ability to score from a distance, and Rockne will have the backs to do this if he can develop a good line, which is probable.

LOTS OF RESERVES

Reserve strength and morale are other factors in the success of the Irish, and neither will be lacking. They face a schedule of nine games, Army, Navy, Northwestern, Carnegie, Southern California and Indiana, who were last year's opponents also, and Southern Methodist, Penn and Pitt, which replace Drake, Wisconsin and Georgia Tech. The chances are against the Irish again winning all their games, just as they are against any team, but I look for them to be strong.

The "antishift" legislation will make no difference to Notre Dame and other teams employing a shift. Rockne has growled a little, but he isn't bothered, I'm sure. Any team that used a legal shift in the past need not worry. The rule has always intended a stop of a second after a shift, and only has been clarified.

If you use an illegal shift you are getting an unfair advantage. It's like one sprinter standing still and the other having a running start.

AMERICAN POLOISTS WIN

Eric Pedley Scores Five of Yankee Goals as Britons Take 10-to-5 Beating

and Guest carried a long-distance wallop that could not be matched

AMERICAN PONIES BEST

The superior pony speed of the United States four was a big advantage most of the way. Only a little extra power was needed to make the victory certain and complete.

The United States four all played fine polo, with Pedley starring at the start, to be joined later by all three mates, who rose to the occasion as a high-class team. Against this fast-riding, hard-hitting, aggressive four the British had to depend largely on Roark and Lacey, who held their own with the best of the American side. Capt. Humphrey Guinness, after a slow early start, came back with some desperate riding to check Pedley, the brilliant Californian, and the captain did a fine job. There wasn't a crash or a ride-off that he shirked all afternoon.

Just after the match opened a foul was called on the United States and Capt. Roark promptly put the first score over. A moment or two later a long, wild ride by Hitchcock and a great goal shot by Eric Pedley evened up the count. The aggressive comeback of these two stars had the big crowd in a wild uproar. It was all give and take here, nip and tuck, for the British responded immediately with another dashing charge down the field and fifty yards away Lacey sent another score spinning between the posts to take the lead. The British just missed another goal as the bell rang. It was in the second period that the United States side ran in its swiftest mounts for a war of aggression. With an attack broken up by Guest at No. 4, Hitchcock and Pedley together then started a march that carried 200 yards before Pedley, with a fine back-handed drive, evened up the count at 2 and 2. The Californian was on top of his best game, missing no chances.

RECOVERS GROUND

Pat Roark on a long gallop soon carried the ball 200 yards with little help and then Guest came back with a counter-charge that recovered all this ground. At the finish Pedley again took over the ball and with a great diagonal shot scored the third goal. The United States was now leading, 3 to 2, and it was beginning to be apparent that Americs had too much pony speed to be caught again. The British held on through the third period, where Balding and Hopping each scored, Hopping driving the ball through with a long back-handed blow that lifted the big crowd to its feet. The American side began to pull away at the start of the fourth period, when Hopping fed the ball to Pedley on two phenomenal shots and Pedley did the rest.

But about this time Capt. Guinness, the British No. 4, began to crowd the California star harder and harder, riding him off more than once with a desperate effort to keep his accurate mallet feat of commission. In the fifth period Hitchcock soon opened with a 100-yard wallop and Pedley's follow-up hit the post and bounded away. With another chance in sight Hopping scored from sixty yards with one of the best efforts of the afternoon, a powerfully driven blow that split the posts.

NEVER HAD CHANCE

This count put the United States four in front at 6 to 3 and from that point on it was easy to see that the British never had a chance. They kept up the fight without wavering to the finish, but all the way to the finish they were being outpaced on the field and outhit in the way of power. Fine work by Lacey and Roark held the score at 7 to 5 through the first six periods and then the entire American side hit its clip and pulled away without being checked. Near the finish the British side looked to be tiring fast from the terrific pace. They were giving all they had, but there was something gone from the early dash and rush of their up and down field charges. The impossible job of trying to keep pace with faster American ponies must have taken its toll, which is only natural. Hopping and Hitchcock added two more goals and then, as a stirring finish, the brilliant Pedley carried the ball for 200 yards to score the final point and leave the count at 10 to 5.

In addition to faster ponies and harder hitting, the United States had the advantage of a stronger combination. There was nothing on the field to surpass the all-around play of Roark and Lacey, but Balding and Guinness were hardly up to the average standard of the men they had to meet. Capt. Hitchcock's team proved to be a strong, smooth organization without a weak spot. There was no letdown at any stage. The British could not quite match the all-around ability of this combination and only the most desperate sort of defensive play on several occasions kept the score from being higher. In the sixth period the British four put two goal defenses that were among the finest of the kind that one will see in a long, long while. But desperate defenses are usually broken down by equally desperate attacks, and this is what happened this afternoon. The United States had the two great factors for attack, speed and the punch. This is the ammunition that carried them through and should decide the issue just as decisively on Wednesday afternoon, when the next match is played. It was a clean, hard, fast battle, with the American side catching most of the penalties, as the offensive team usually does. But there was nothing to indicate that the British can close up the gap at their next start, no matter how gamely they may fight back.

The line-ups and summary:

America (10)		Great Britain (5)
Eric Pedley	No. 1	Gerald Balding
Earle A. E. Hopping	No. 2	Lewis L. Lacey
Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.	No. 3	Capt. C. T. I. Roark

National Doubles Proves to be Final Obstacle

Young Stars Show Promise Throughout Season

Tilden Selects American Tennis Teams

BY WILLIAM T. TILDEN II

FOREST HILLS (Long Island) Sept. 6. (NANA)—The national doubles championship, as national championships have a habit of doing, proved too great a stumbling block for the rising 1930 stars to overcome.

One cannot say youth failed, for the champions, George Lott and John Doeg, and the runners-up, Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn, are all youngsters. But in the hullabaloo created during their absence by Messers Wood, Vines and Sutter, our young Davis Cup stars became, in the minds of the public, "veteran international-ists" and almost "aged net stars." However, as tennis goes, these men are really old in experience compared to Wood, Sutter and Vines.

ELLSWORTH VINES.

I do not mean that the new stars did not do well. They did. Sidney Wood in particular was most impressive in his play against Van Ryn and Allison. If Shields had not faltered at critical moments, the Wimbledon champions might then have gone down to defeat. However, it was that greater experience of just such critical moments that carried the Davis Cup pair to victory.

EXPERIENCE COUNTS

Young Vines and Keith Gledhill outplayed Lott and Doeg and should have won in four sets when they led two to one and four games to two on their own service, but once more inexperience led them into useless error and they faltered at the moment victory was in their hands. Lott and Doeg sensed this and applied pressure to carry them to victory.

The national championship, whether doubles or singles, is the real test of any player. Only the Davis Cup matches surpasses it for strain. Records prove that experience is a great asset in tennis, and nowhere does its value become more apparent than during the national championships.

There is no question but what such players as Wood, Sutter, Shields and Vines have tremendous potential power, yet today they lack just a shade of the necessary experience to carry them through the strain of the biggest tournaments. A few years more, a season or two ahead, then one will find these boys equal to any emergency in a match.

The victory in the final round of Lott and Doeg was a great achievement. It was a remarkable piece of tennis by George Lott and a great display of courage by Doeg.

Doeg started very well but went off form, his lapse allowing the other team to pull even. But in the critical fifth set it was Doeg's stubborn defense that gave Lott his chances for finishing points. I am convinced George Lott is the best doubles player in the United States. His eye for openings is uncanny, while his lobbing defense and crushing net attack are the best in the game today, excepting Borotra's and Cochet's.

Allison and Van Ryn are a mystery. They can win in Europe and yet at home they seem to lack the spark. I cannot solve it. I still think they are a better team than Lott and Doeg and would win the majority of matches, but when the critical match came last week they failed.

It was the irony of fate that Allison, who had played well all during the long four first sets, should be the one to crack and lose the vital break in the fifth, for up to then he had been holding an erratic and uncertain Van Ryn in the match. It was for only a moment but that moment was enough.

THE RANKING

The doubles ranking is puzzling. I offer the following:

(1.) Lott and Doeg, national champions.

The second position is difficult. On the American season only Frank Hunter and I should come next, yet Wimbledon must be counted for Allison and Van Ryn, who over here have done nothing prior to the nationals. I bracket the teams as 2 and 3.

Allison and Van Ryn, Tilden and Hunter. The former lost to Tidball and Bartosh at Southampton, meaning little as they were just off the boat, and to Neer and Fiebleman at Newport. We lost to Wood and Shields at Southampton, though I was just off the boat, and to Vines and Glenhill at Rye, following my injury. We won at Newport beating Coen and Coggleshall, Vines and Gledhill, Tidball and Bartosh after they had beaten Lott and Doeg.

4. Bell and Mangin, winners at Southampton.
5. Wood and Shields.
6. Vines and Gledhill.
7. Coen and Coggleshall, Newport finalists.
8. Tilball and Bartosh.
9. Hall and Mercur.

I never remember a time when there were as many teams that show promise and seem destined to stay together. Seldom have I seen a higher standard of play throughout a tournament than this year at the national doubles. I still believe Allison and Van Ryn are the best American pair over a season, yet I realize as well that I have no grounds for my belief.

Anyway, it is an interesting problem for some one. I guess it's up to Lott to solve it himself.

UPLIFTERS IN BATTLE WITH CAVALRY RIDERS

Making their first local appearance of the season, the Eleventh Cavalry Army polo team will ride against the Uplifters this afternoon in Santa Monica Canyon. The game is billed for 2:30 o'clock and is being sponsored by the Los Angeles Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Maj. D. S. Wood, one of the outstanding polo players developed in the Army, heads the visiting delegation today. He was formerly a six-handicap man, but has been out of the game for several years because of illness. He will play No. 3 position for the Army.

The Uplifters will present Will Rogers, Jr., at No. 1, with Hale Marsh, the fast-traveling Santa Barbara youth, in No. 2 position. Lionel Pedley and Dr. Harry Wilson will fill the other two posts.

This afternoon's program will include a polo parade, pony racing and military band display, in addition to the radio broadcast, which will be handled by Snowy Baker.

The line-ups:

Eleventh Cavalry		Uplifters
Lieut. Jernigan	No. 1	Will Rogers, Jr.
Lieut. Thornburgh	No. 2	Hale Marsh
Maj. Wood	No. 3	Lionel Pedley
Capt. Falck	Back	Dr. H. Wilson
Lieut. Hughes alternate.

BAR BENNIE KAUFF FROM RACE TRACK

COLUMBUS (O.) Sept. 6 (AP)—Bennie Kauff, former National League baseball star, and W. Habjam, a jockey, were banned from the Beulah Park race track today. H. D. Shepard, general manager of the track, said they would be denied the privileges of the grounds because they indulged in "practices deterimental to horse racing."

Track officials announced indefinite suspension of Jockey D. Burney, Trainer D. Emery and a racing mare, Verae.

BILL CUMMINGS WINS SYRACUSE AUTO RACE

SYRACUSE (N. Y.) Sept. 6. (AP)—Bill Cummings of Los Angeles today captured the 100-mile dirt-track championship race for motor cars at the New York State fair grounds here. Litz was second and Cantion third.

Cummings again broke the world's record for seventy-five miles and his time for the century was 1:11: 52 1-5. The old mark was 1:14 4-5. He made the seventy-five miles in 53:38. The old mark was 54:25, made by Lockhart.

SANTA ANA JAYSEE TO HAVE POWERFUL ELEV

SANTA ANA, Sept. 7. (Exclusive) Defense of their Southern California Junior College Conference championship holds no terrors for the Santa Ana Dons in comparison with the tough preseason schedule prepared for them by Coach Bill Cook, dapper Trojan quarterback of other years.

Before starting the conference chase against the Long Beach Vikings on October 11, Santa Ana will tackle Chaffey Junior College on the 20th inst., Southern California freshmen on the 27th inst., and Menlo Junior College on October 4. All three tussles will be waged at the local Poly gridiron.

Cook believes in Bob Zuppke's philosophy: That the greatest practice in the world is against stout-hearted men and not "rag dolls." Pals with Man Style Style with manliness is what men seek these days. The Robt. Burns Panatela presents vivid evidence of their changing habits. They relish a smart type of smoking they may call their own.

Men like the emphatic MAN STYLE of this long, graceful, genteel cigar. Men in business—men in sport go with it. More satisfying than a cigarette, it stops the reach, reach, reach for just another smoke. Its fragrant mildness—thanks to clear Havana filler—gives the smoker taste free from the jolt of strong tobacco.

Men discover quickly that it suits young features, and faces which are away years. Secure the calm of a pleasing ingratiating smoke. Add style to manliness with a Robt. Burns Panatela.

WANTED—HELP—Male

Salesmen, Solicitors —10-B

THIS ADVERTISEMENT IS ADDRESSED TO THE THOUSANDS OF SINCERE SALESMEN AND SALESWOMEN IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WHOM WE KNOW WILL WELCOME THIS

NEWS

We know from nearly a quarter of a century's experience that salespeople of the better class are constantly alert to opportunities to improve themselves and their positions, and on the lookout for new things that the public wants and is buying, and that even non-salespeople eager to enter the realm of settled under the proper auspices and with something to sell that will bring happiness to its buyers, will welcome this advertisement.

We are building a very large selling organization and we cannot possibly give our time to individual explanations that is why we want you to know something NOW about what we have to offer. We have created through the CLARK Plan Corporation, Ltd., the CLARK PLAN TRUST, a trust-controlled trust—an estate operated by several well-known men, and supervised by a board of trustees of high integrity and reputation.

We have made it available to everyone through subscriptions plan of as little as $10 down and $10 a month, without interest on the deferred payments. The plan is the result of nearly two years of work and study, and it eliminates every objectionable feature of every trust arrangement with which we are familiar.

The contributions that arise in the average man's family are provided for, and the subscriber is entitled to 4% cumulative interest annually, PLUS 50% of the net profits above that. Before the maximum returns are to be compensated for its still, diligence and injudicious manage in the funds of the trust.

Every practical protection has been thrown around the Clark Plan to the end that it be as nearly flawless as possible.

Should your selling activity, should you join us, will be a vigorous, well-directed advertising campaign larger than anything of its kind ever projected in Southern California. We have 12 full pages, complete, ready to start functioning. Ready? There will be plenty of them! Interesting? Why, Major Landowne, one of the best-versed trust experts in Southern California, and a salesman himself of wide and excellent repute.

While we are interested in securing experienced salespeople, some of the best in our organization in the past have been men who had never been in any sales material. If we think you can make good, we will train you. Remember, we don't know that if you become identified with this big fine organization that you will be benefited by your connection and you will find it very profitable if you live up to its ideals and standards.

COME IN SUNDAY MORNING AT 9:30, IN TIME TO HEAR MAJOR LANDOWNE'S TALK. YOU'RE WELCOME OR CALL UP. YOU WILL HEAR IT TOLD AS IT IS—WITHOUT FICTION OR EMBELLISHMENT. Then you can determine whether you want to become a member of our family.

FRANK H. CLARK, INC., LTD. Second Floor, Investment Building, 315 West 5th Street, Los Angeles.

AUTO SALESMEN

Mr. Jobholder

Get out of the rut. Don't work for a meager salary all of your life; be a salesman. A pleasant position in a salesroom with unlimited earning possibilities. Be your own boss. Earn while you learn. Many men now managers of earning $10,000 a year are sacrificing their services at $100 a month. Be smart. Qualify for your share of the profits. Whittington personally my time for your convenience EVENINGS also CALL AT OFFICE ALL DAY. A real opportunity.

A LIFE WORK

If you are dissatisfied and unhappy in your present work, or if you are unemployed your problem may be lastingly solved by thoughtfully reading the following.

Statistics show life underwriting as the most highly paid salesmen. Many in Los Angeles earn from $5,000 to $30,000 and more annually. Dignified, beneficial, interesting, constructive, permanent occupation. You are essentially building for yourself. Learn the life insurance business and you will never again have to seek employment.

The Pacific Mutual home office in Los Angeles, one of the old and large life insurance companies of America, will consider the application of men of character and ability between the ages of 22 to 45. Those selected will immediately be offered a permanent position and will receive every possible assistance. Our comprehensive courses of instruction and practical field assistance are calculated to develop any ambitious man into a successful underwriter. Our school for salesmen is internationally known as the insurance world. 322 Pacific Mutual Building, Sixth street and Grand avenue. Ask for Mr. Arms.

NOTICE—Next class begins at 9 o'clock Monday morning, September 8th. Come in and attend the first sessions without obligation to continuing. We can then mutually decide if you are fitted.

Ventura Police Chief Orders Water Taxis to Quit

Finds Both Out of Operation and 100 Left on Barge

VENTURA, Sept. 6.—Indications that the water taxis of the gambling ship William H. Harriman, barred from the Ventura wharf by police, would attempt to operate from some county point outside the city limits, were seen today.

Chief of Police Clarence Mattson, with a squad of armed officers, visited the Ventura wharf at 6 o'clock last night to order the taxi skippers to stop taking out passengers, he said. When he arrived he found that both taxis were out of operation. The Bear Cat has been disabled several days, and the Barney Google fouled her propellor on a mooring line during the afternoon after taking out about 100 customers to the Harriman, according to wharf attaches. The Amazon was engaged to remove the 100 stranded visitors.

Orders not to transport any more passengers to the gaming hulk were passed out, the wharf was roped off, and a patrol was stationed to see that these orders were complied with, according to the police head.

The State law against conveying passengers to gaming barges was invoked against the water taxi skippers, Chief Mattson explained.

Failure of an effort of B. Tudor, representative of the Harriman, to make a deal to remain at Ventura until Sunday night, and to leave voluntarily then, if the police would withhold interference, was related by Chief Mattson. At that time Tudor indicated that the ship would go south to take the place of the Monfalcone which burned recently, the Police Chief said.

POWER TO COST CITY BUT LITTLE

Municipal Light Fund will Cover Pasadena's Expense for Boulder Dam Current

PASADENA, Sept. 6.—Through use of the $600,000 annual surplus funds of the municipal light department, this city will be able to defray the entire expense of obtaining power from Boulder Dam without raising local taxes, according to City Attorney Harold Huls.

Following a conference today with Benjamin F. DeLanty, local light department head, Huls expressed the opinion that at the end of a fifty-year period the entire cost of bringing the Boulder power to this city over costly transmission lines will have been paid in full with the light plant profits.

City Attorney Huls conferred yesterday afternoon with R. J. Coffey, counsel for the United States Reclamation Bureau.

Coffey is asserted to have remarked that Pasadena is in an excellent financial position to take advantage of the Boulder Dam power facilities.

Light and power rates are expected to be materially reduced as soon as power is transmitted here from the Colorado water project. The exact amount of this saving has not been estimated, but it is anticipated by officials that Los Angeles will save between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 annually.

In view of the fact that San Bernardino has been informed that it may not be able to secure the 11 per cent of the power set aside for smaller cities, local city officials believe there is a possibility that Pasadena's allotment may be increased.

To obtain its allotted share, San Bernardino, it is said, must vote a charter amendment within the next twenty days.

Those in close touch with the situation anticipate that Beverly Hills and Fullerton, because they lack adequate power distribution systems, will enter into agreements with private concerns for the transmission of their Boulder power allotments.

On Wednesday afternoon representatives of the smaller cities interested will consider their respective problems relative to Boulder Dam power in a round-table conference with Coffey.

UNDERTAKERS VICTIMIZED

San Diego Police Tell of New Check Racket Whereby Smooth Stranger Mulcts Morticians

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 6.—Police here are seeking a racketeer who preys on undertakers and who defrauded a local firm of $100 recently. According to P. J. Slattery, detective sergeant, the scheme is one of the cleverest check frauds ever perpetrated here. The racketeer who operated here is said to have defrauded undertakers in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other Pacific Coast cities.

Here is the way he works: He scans the death notices in the daily papers and selects the name of some person who has died. Several days after the funeral, he calls the mortician who handled the body and represents himself as one of the near relatives of the deceased.

"I have been called out of town suddenly and I want to settle my account with you," the racketeer states by telephone. After determining the amount of the bill he then states that he has a certified cashier's check for an amount in excess of the bill. He promises to send the check by messenger. When the messenger arrives at the undertaking establishment the racketeer secretes himself somewhere near the place and watches the entry and exit of the messenger. After the latter leaves, the racketeer hurries to a near-by telephone and asks the undertaker if the check has arrived. Told that it did, the racketeer asks if cash or a check was given the messenger to return to him. "Why, I gave him money for the change," the undertaker states. "My, my, that is too bad, I wanted a check, but if you gave him cash I guess I will struggle along with it," the racketeer states, and then concludes the conversation.

Knowing from the tenor of the conversation that no suspicion has been aroused, the racketeer calls at the messenger office for the cash change. Then, with the $100 which was obtained from the San Diego funeral director, the racketeer "leaves town suddenly." The check turns out to be bogus.

Slattery, in deference to the actual victims in the case here, declined to give out the names, but stated that he thought publication of the facts might prevent further frauds of this kind.

PIONEERS SELECTED BY UPLAND

Two Women of Early Days to be Given High Honors on Pilgrimage Day

UPLAND, Sept. 6.—After searching over the State to find the oldest pioneer women to receive special honors at the "Pioneer Pilgrimage" at the statue "The Madonna of the Trail," Foothill Boulevard and Euclid avenue, Tuesday, the committee announced today that Mrs. Caroline Cook, 212 South San Antonio avenue, Ontario, and Mrs. Josephine Young of Colton, have been selected.

Mrs. Cook has lived in California eighty years, and in Ontario twenty years. She will symbolize the "Pioneer Mother" at the pilgrimage. Her age is 84 years.

Mrs. Young is 87 years of age, and will be introduced as the oldest pioneer woman in the State to be found by the committee.

Mrs. Cook crossed the plains in an ox cart when she was only 4 years of age. Both women accepted the invitations to participate in the pilgrimage to the statue of the pioneer mother.

Names of old pioneers were received from all parts of California by the committee in charge of the event. The names were listed, and the oldest in point of residence and in age were selected.

A parade of pioneer transportation and persons of the pioneer age is announced for the morning. Included in the program will be an address by John Steven McGroarty. Other features of the day will include Spanish entertainers, cowboy orchestra, March Field Military Band, dancers, square dancing, horseshoe pitching, old fiddlers' contest and Indian ceremonials by Chief Young Eagle.

The Chamber of Commerce and all other civic and patriotic organizations of the community are uniting in sponsoring the pageant.

Motion-Picture Air Service is Feature at Port

VAN NUYS, Sept. 6.—Creation of a motion-picture aviation service was announced today by Hal R. Wells, newly appointed general manager of the Los Angeles Metropolitan Airport, with the leasing of hangar space to Garland Lincoln, motion-picture man. He will base six airplanes. Three of them are the famous war-time Neuport planes. For several years Lincoln has furnished these now nearly extinct ships for use in making air war movies, creating a novel enterprise.

Most of the current feature war pictures were made using his equipment, which is kept in perfect flying condition, he states, and which later he plans to preserve as museum pieces. Lincoln, who acted as an Army air instructor during the war at San Diego, plans to maintain his new offices in hangar No. 2 at the Metropolitan Airport.

Increased activity among all branches of the aircraft industry operating at the Metropolitan was also made public by Wells. The Angelus Aero Corporation, headed by Joe Shannon, now reports a full enrollment of students at the school with more than 50 per cent flying as solo pilots. The Aviation Sales Company, under the direction of Larry Therkelson, announces the sale of three planes since the first of the month.

The Commercial Aircraft Corporation reports the trial flights of a newly designed and built glider as being successful and further announcement concerning plans for production will shortly be made by the manager, A. B. Green.

ELECTION CALLED

LAGUNA BEACH, Sept. 6. — A special election asking residents to vote $20,000 for the acquisition of a site, construction and completion of a station for a fire department, and purchase of equipment, is set for the 23rd inst. Rapid growth of the city demands better fire protection.

FRUIT FLY ARMY FOUGHT

Government Entomologist Conducts Experiments for Coping with Hypothetical Attack of Pests

PASADENA, Sept. 6.—The first experiments in which citrus fruit in being treated to overcome the effect of attack by a hypothetical army of Mediterranean fruit flies are being conducted here in the local plant of the Sierra Madre-Lamanda Citrus Association, it was learned today.

The experiments are in charge of A. C. Luckie, entomologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, which is continuing its quarantine of Florida fruits and vegetables despite the fact that none of the dreaded flies have been found in Florida for several weeks.

The principal purpose of the tests is to demonstrate how citrus fruit should be treated for shipment in the unexpected event that flies should be carried here from Australia or Hawaii in the luggage or clothes of travelers.

In the Federal laboratory in the local packing-plant, oranges, lemons and grapefruit are treated with vapor, hot air and other things, in an effort to prove that such treatments do not impair the quality of the fruit when it reaches the market.

Similar treatments were given in Florida when the plague was at its height, but they have never before been demonstrated in a preventive and educational campaign.

Due to the efforts being made to develop improved methods of treatment in the event of fly infestations, the local experimenters are attracting the interest of fruit growers throughout the United States.

Although deciduous fruits were no treated in Florida, Luckie and his fellow-scientists are planning to experiment with this problem in the present tests with the hope of devising satisfactory methods.

In order to determine whether the treatments affect differently fruits grown in widely separated localities, similar experiments are scheduled to be conducted later throughout Southern California.

SHE'S CREAM OF MILKMAIDS

Milking Champion to Defend Title

Marie McGaugh, Los Angeles County Fair Winner

There will be a larger entry list than ever before in the milking contest at Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona this year. The milking competition will be followed by a churning contest, a new feature this year.

POMONA, Sept. 6.—Again this year the battle of the milkmaids will be staged at Los Angeles County Fair here and, according to Jay Dutter, southern representative of the California Dairy Council, and the man directly in charge of the novel event, there will be a bigger entry list than ever before.

Last year the title was won by Marie McGaugh. She will attempt to retain the crown again this year but keen competition has developed. According to the rules the girl is given a cow, a milk pail and a milking stool, and time is called. At the end of five minutes the contestant having the largest quantity of milk is declared the winner.

The event will be staged on the morning of Saturday, the 13th inst., and entries can be made either by personal application at the fair office on the grounds or by mail.

The milking contest will be followed by a churning contest, a new feature this year. In addition there will be the annual farmerette contest.

Winners of the milking and the churning contest will be sent to the Pacific Slope Dairy Show in Oakland where they will compete with other contestants for national and international championships.

Head of Senate of Philippines at Pottenger's

MONROVIA, Sept. 6.—Manuel Quezon, president of the Philippine Senate, who arrived in Los Angeles Thursday night from Seattle, has returned to Pottenger's Sanatorium here for an extended rest, it was learned today. He was accompanied here by his wife and two children who have taken a house in Hollywood. Two physicians also accompanied the president on his trip here, but will not remain with him. His secretary will remain here, however.

Dr. Robert Pottenger stated today that he could not give out a statement regarding condition of Quezon, who is now going through the clinic, but stated that he is quite exhausted from his journey.

Quezon was in the sanatorium for several months two years ago and during part of that time his family resided here with him.

VETERANS' POST GROWS

SOUTH GATE, Sept. 6.—The Veterans of Foreign Wars Post, recently organized in this city, is rapidly increasing in membership, a large class of candidates having recently been initiated, bringing the membership now up to ninety. The Bell post of Pasadena conducted the last initiation work.

Grand Master of Masons in Inglewood Visit

INGLEWOOD, Sept. 6.—More than 600 members of the Masonic fraternity of Centinela Valley, and scores of visitors, attended the outdoor reception in Grevilles Park to Grand Master Charles M. Wallenberg of the Eighty-eighth Masonic District, who is here from his home in San Francisco visiting the lodges within his jurisdiction.

Deputy Grand Master John Stewart Ross of Los Angeles accompanied him on his visit to Inglewood, and both were introduced to the assemblage by Lee Mullen, master of ceremonies. The two distinguished visitors responded briefly, speaking over a public-address system installed in the park for the occasion.

A group of other officials of the Eighty-eighth Masonic District were present and were introduced. Superior Court Judges Haslett, Valentine, Bush and Hanby, all members of the order, were also introduced. On the speakers' stand were Mayor Hugh B. Lawrence, Chief of Police Herbert L. Bennett, Constable William Hernlein, Judge A. F. Monroe, and other local officials.

Fred R. Pardee, inspector of the district, and former master of the Inglewood lodge, had charge of the arrangements, and was ably assisted by a woman's committee under the joint chairmanship of Mrs. Pardee and Mrs. Louis B. Hardin, Jr.

An interesting entertainment program, including music and impersonation skits, furnished diversion for the large gathering of people and an al fresco beefsteak dinner concluded the evening.

Church Croquet Game to Combat Baby-Golf Fad

MOORPARK, Sept. 6.—Officials of the Moorpark Community Church are not to be misled by the miniature golf craze now with a hold on the country. Officials of the church are busy laying out a croquet ground on the lawn between the church proper and the parsonage.

"Baby golf, after all is said and done, is only a glorified game of croquet with a few trimmings added to it," said one of the church officials today, "and we don't propose to have our young folks wandering away and out of the fold."

The croquet games will start at once, under the direction of a committee appointed to teach every member of the Sunday-school classes how to swing mallets and judge the distances between wickets.

VICTIM OF MOWING MACHINE INTERRED

CHINO, Sept. 6.—Funeral services will be held tomorrow morning at Chino Catholic Church for Francisco Caballbro, Jr., 17-year-old local youth, who met his death under the sharp blades of a mowing machine. Caballbro was driving a team of mules hitched to the mowing machine. A covey of pheasants suddenly flew up in front of the mules, causing them to bolt in fright. The youth was thrown from the seat of the machine, and was caught under it. The sharp knives lacerated his body, and the weight of the machine fractured his skull. A coroner's inquest today at Richardson and Henry funeral home returned a verdict of accidental death. Caballbro was taken to San Antonio Community Hospital, Upland, where he died without regaining consciousness.

WORKERS FLEE FROM FLEAS

Employees in Old City Hall at Glendale Drop Work to Scratch and Use "Language," After Invasion of Building by Myriads of Insect Pests

GLENDALE, Sept. 6.—Employees in the various departments housed in the old City Hall today dropped all pretense at work and devoted themselves exclusively to repelling the attacks of myriads of fleas that have taken refuge in the vines that clothe the front of the building. A similar invasion occurred several months ago, and at that time it was thought that the pruning of the vines and the rout of the fleas had ended the trouble for all time. But the city officials were basking in a state of false optimism, as it turned out.

The fleas that were driven off in the former battle have recruited their battalions up to full strength, and have returned to open the fall campaign in the old sector. The casualties have been heaviest among the stockingless girl clerks, whose plump knees and succulent calves offer the pests the chance of a flea's lifetime to drink deep. As a result the girls are scratching furiously and using language from between firmly clenched teeth that hardly harmonizes with the approach of the Sabbath.

The present fleas have evidently been training to improve their footwork, for they can sidestep faster and jump farther than their predecessors could, according to the somewhat-biased reports from the City Hall.

As a possible means of routing the fleas, the health department is planning to import a flock of Mexican jumping beans, on the theory that the fleas, when they see what the beans can do on the level in the way of jumping, may curl up and die of mortification. Meantime orders have been placed for insecticides, lotions, and other flea deterrents, even though faith in their efficacy is at a low ebb.

The only way to chase away the pests and bring surcease to punctured skins is felt to be the removal of the present crop of vines that festoon the City Hall.

NEW EXECUTIVE SPEAKS

Gov. Arturo Bernal, of Northern District of Baja California, Outlines His Program

MEXICALI, Sept. 6.—In a statement given out today through his newly appointed chief of Department of Commerce, Industry, Tourists and the Press, Miguel Angel Menendez, Gov. Arturo Bernal outlined a program of construction and work that will give employment to several thousands and which is to start at once, he said.

The first activity will be centered upon the construction of the main highway from Tia Juana through to San Luis, Son., which has been advocated by Govs. Rodriguez and Tapia.

The funds on hand now will permit only of making the roadway complete for paving next year with Congressional appropriations then available, said the Governor. Work will begin from the capital at Mexicali each way west toward Tia Juana and eastward to Algodones. This will relieve some of the unemployment problem now in existence.

Beginning today with a personal inspection of the Mexicali hospitals, jails and police stations, the Governor appointed a commission, comprised of a physician and an engineer, to further the inspection and recommend improvements.

He then installed the following heads of departments: Gen. Norberto Heredia, inspector of police; Roberto Vaca Martinez, director of public works and highways, and Miguel Angel Menendez, Department of Commerce.

To each of his officials the new Governor has reiterated the program of President Ortiz Rubio that officials must work and give a good account of their offices, or else step aside for some one who is willing to work. And these officials have found that the constant reminder of this slogan is the Governor himself who is consistently at his tasks during working hours.

MASONS SERVE BEEFSTEAK

Annual Event of Monrovia Lodge Attended by 1500 of Order; Grand Master Chief Speaker

MONROVIA, Sept. 6.—It took approximately fifty steers to serve steaks to 1500 Masons assembled last night on the grounds of the Monrovia Masonic Temple, when Monrovia Lodge No. 308, were hosts at their annual beefsteak dinner.

B. D. Haugh, Master of Monrovia lodge, and J. C. Clewett Master of Sojourner lodge, officially presided, and Grand Master Charles M. Wollenberg of San Francisco on his official visit to Monrovia, was the principal speaker of the occasion.

Leon Whitsell of San Francisco, chairman of the history committee of the Grand Lodge, was among the large delegation of visitors.

The host of Masons consumed in addition to the fifty steers, two tons of watermelons and an unknown quantity of Mexican beans and French fried potatoes, according to Ben Ruechel, in charge of the dinner. J. G. Weil, in charge of the serving, with Ruechel, were assisted by a corps of 150 men who broiled steaks and served the tables.

Leslie M. Reusker, popular Mason, originator of the annual steak dinners, directed the program of entertainment, which included such famous radio stars as the Beverly Hills "Hill Billies" and four acts of vaudeville.

Chief of Police Frank Scott, who was in charge of traffic, stated today that there were fully 700 visitors' cars here last night. Special officers detailed to assist Scott were Officers Phillips, Church, Bovee, Odwarker and Bixler.

Masons acclaimed the event last night as one of the largest and most successful of its kind ever sponsored by the local lodge.

'GYPPING' BY GYPSY TOLD BY WOMAN

Miss Cecile Rimer Bewails Loss of Cash in Goldfish Bowl by Unlucky Figures

VENICE, Sept. 6.—A colorfully clad gipsy and an asserted "gypping" figured last night in a police report filed by Miss Cecile Rimer, of 12 Avenue 24, Venice. Miss Rimer, a sister-in-law of Adolph Tandler, noted musician, was said by police to have been victimized to the tune of $495, which she assertedly drew from a bank when a young gypsy woman came to her home and, learning the amount of the bank account, convinced her victim that the combination of Nos. 4, 9 and 5 was very bad luck. The gypsy persuaded Miss Rimer to draw out the money and place it in a goldfish bowl in the house, where it was to be "cured" of its evil spell. The curative spell required placing a cloth over the money in the bowl while certain incantations were directed against the dreadful 4-9-5 combination. The money — or what Miss Rimer believed to be the money — was then placed beneath a bed where, the gypsy asserted, it would be cured of all evil in an hour. The gypping gypsy then left, and an hour later, police say, the victim brought from beneath the bed, all nicely cured, a fat roll of blank paper.

The description of the gypsy given police estimates her age at about 25, weight 125 pounds, height 5 feet and 5 inches. This combination of fives seems to spell bad luck, officers admitted. The dark lady wore a green silk dress sprinkled with pink flowers, which would identify her readily anywhere, but in a gypsy camp. She had on a green knit cap, low black shoes and gray stockings.

Road Widening Near Yucaipa Now Under Way

YUCAIPA, Sept. 6. — Work on $34,000 of improvements to the State ocean-to-ocean highway through Yucaipa from Beaumont to Redlands is under way. Contract was let several days ago for this important improvement.

Six-foot shoulders will be laid on each side of the pavement from the Riverside-San Bernardino county line to Beaumont. This will necessitate expensive fills and wider culverts where the highway traverses canyons and streams. Although the work will take three months, traffic controls will be instituted where crews are at work and no detouring will be necessary.

The highway was graded nine years ago under the old standards of highway construction. Thus, when the twenty-foot pavement was laid, the road was practically as wide as the graded right of way. This has wrought great inconvenience to motorists and has been responsible for several serious accidents. People are accustomed to expecting a margin of safety along paved highways and on this stretch there has been none. The Highway Commission, therefore, awarded this contract two weeks ago.

Work also has started on the grading out of sharp curves. The first work has been finished at Calimesa, where the up-hill grade approaching the Riverside county line from Redlands has been "daylighted." No pavement will be laid on these newly graded curves, however, until the fills have had ample opportunity to settle sufficiently to support a new road.

The new shoulders being built will not be oiled or paved. Decomposed granite, the material that is naturally available in that district, is an excellent surface for the shoulders.

Discrimination Charged in Suit Filed by Negro

RIVERSIDE, Sept. 6.—Race discrimination, as it affects restaurant owners choosing to refuse service to anyone they so select, yesterday was assured of a test before the Superior Court with the filing of an action by a Coachella Valley Negro asking $1000 damages.

The plaintiff, H. D. Inghram, in a complaint filed in the office of County Clerk Clayton by Attorney Martin J. Coughlin of San Bernardino, asserts he was refused service in a Coachella Valley restaurant owned by a man named Alaboonis.

Inghram, who says he is an American citizen, declares he walked into the cafe one morning, seated himself and asked to be served some breakfast, whereupon the proprietor notified him he would not serve him and refused to order his food.

He avers he was humiliated, mortified, and caused mental agony to the extent of $1000.

"The defendant denied to said plaintiff equal accommodations, advantages, facilities and privileges granted to other persons in said restaurant or eating house, and discriminated and made a distinction and restriction in respect to the treatment accorded plaintiff in said restaurant or eating-house, and refused to serve said plaintiff on the sole ground that the plaintiff was a member of the Negro or black race," according to the complaint.

PHONE RATE REDUCED IN REDLANDS

Cut of 25 Cents Monthly Told in State Railroad Body's Announcement

REDLANDS, Sept. 6.—Redlands telephone users are going to pay about $9000 a year less for the pleasure of hearing central say "line's busy" the coming year, for the Railroad Commission today announced a reduction in rates for the Southwestern Home Telephone Company of this city for that amount.

The reduction is 25 cents per month on all telephones in Redlands, a total of about 3200, which will make a yearly reduction of about $9600. Also the present reduction for prompt payment will continue in effect. The State Railroad Commission has fixed the rates to return the company about 7 per cent on a rate basis of $442,000. The new rates are the result of a long fight by the City Council here for lower rates, two or three hearings in Redlands and several trips to San Francisco by Barry Dibble, engineer, and Walter Hartsell, city attorney.

No difference in rate is apparent between two-party service and the more crowded lines, inasmuch as the company does not provide four-party and eight-party service except in comparatively remote districts, where main line and two-party service cannot be made available because of excessive operating expense.

The suburban rate on wall sets is cut from $3.50 a month to $2.25. This affects Yucaipa, Oak Glen, East Highlands, Calimesa and Santimoteo Canyon.

For private branch exchanges, the rate on the first trunk is cut from $5.75 a month to $5.50. On additional trunks the rate will be $4.75 after October 1, instead of $5.

TREE-SITTING HEN HATCHES HER CHICKS

MONTEBELLO, Sept. 6. — Although tree-sitting has become quite popular as an outdoor sport among small boys, Mrs. W. A. Rule, who lives on Telegraph Road in this city, has something unique along this line as a tree-sitter. A Plymouth Rock hen established herself some four weeks ago in a crotch of a tree sixteen feet above the ground, laid a dozen eggs and yesterday hatched every one. As soon as the little chicks were all hatched, Mrs. Rule, fearing they would fall from their elevated nest, climbed a ladder and carefully removed them. She established them in a chicken coop on the ground, but the hen, realizing she was the mother of ordinary ground chicks, instead of tree sitters, then promptly disowned them.

Wife of San Diego Beer Raid Captive Makes Charges

Myrtle Martin Says Man Raiders Made Love

She and Her Husband to Ask Grand Jury Action

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 6.—The county grand jury will be asked to investigate charges that an officer made love to Mrs. Myrtle Martin during a beer raid upon her home last Saturday night, it was announced today. Ernest Martin, 35 years of age, convicted of possession of 100 bottles of beer three days ago, was sentenced to pay a $150 fine by Judge James P. Kelly in Police Court. After court Martin and his wife declared that they have learned the identity of the officer named "Johnson" who, they say, made love to Mrs. Martin. "We are dissatisfied with the conclusions reached by Chief of Police Arthur Hid and will ask, through our attorney, that the grand jury investigate this matter," Martin said.

Mrs. Martin was not placed under arrest when four officers of the police vice squad raided the home Saturday night. She said one of the officers volunteered to take her to the home of a friend a short distance away and that on the way the officer made love to her.

Mrs. Martin said the officer who accompanied her was not one of the four raiding officers, but that he wore a badge and had accompanied other police in the raid.

Oil Interests Lay Plans to Fight Ordinance

HUNTINGTON BEACH, Sept. 6.—The Oil Protective Association met yesterday in its headquarters in the Cook Apartments and laid plans for launching a vigorous campaign to defeat four measures to be voted upon by the residents at a special election slated for the 22rd inst. T. Newland, president, presiding.

The propositions to be voted on affect the promotion of oil in this field. Operators would be required to post bonds for fire insure putting the property back into its original condition when the well is finally abandoned; would demand the filing of a financial statement to protect the employees' wages; calls for the erection of derrick towers to the oil rigs when constructed within 125 feet of another rig, building of roads, and the filing of a statement to show the establishment of a waste-water disposal system.

Members of the association attacked the measures, stating that they are discriminatory and contrary in their effect, in that other industries are discriminated against. Too much discretionary power is given to the board of trustees, it is declared. The association members contend that the waste-water and financial measures are unfair, and the bond is excessive. The derrick clause does not strike at the major hazard of the oil field, the greatest danger coming from leaking lines, it was declared.

The City Council adopted the ordinance covering the four measures last winter and later rescinded it when a petition opposing it was presented to the Council, signed by 400 registered voters.

Tragedy Ends Vacation Tour

ONTARIO, Sept. 6.—A summer's vacation tour of the East by automobile turned into tragedy for the family of Sam Johnston of this Sixth street, according to a message received here from Vaughn, N. M.

Johnston was returning to his home here with Mrs. Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Saerger of Pittsburgh, relatives.

At Vaughn their car figured in a crash with another automobile and Johnston was instantly killed. The other occupants of the car were hurt.

Mrs. Johnston returned to Pittsburgh with the body of her husband, where it will be buried. Mr. and Mrs. Saerger came here by train to locate.

Johnston leaves a widow, one daughter living in Seattle, and a brother and sister, both residents of Pittsburgh.

cause any offense they may have committed in Orange county, thereby depriving him of their case, Mrs. Anna Madge Lloyd, 30, paramour, C. L. Howard, 31, were released from jail, where they had been confined on a charge following sensational disclosures at the trial of divorce.

Both Mrs. Benton and Howard admitted on the witness stand that Howard was the father of her child, born after her separation from her husband, Lloyd Benton, in this city.

Mrs. Benton and Howard have gone from here to Fresno county, where they now are residing. Howard is an oil worker.

A transcript of the court proceedings here is being prepared by Asst. Dist.-Atty. Sam L. Collins, to be forwarded to the Fresno county District Attorney. Judge Allen awarded the divorce decree to Benton yesterday after denying the wife's suit.

wedding of her former classmate at Marlborough, Miss Martita Brennan, when she became the bride of Alfredo Johnson. On her return, Miss Kuder entertained for the bride with a beautifully appointed luncheon and shower at the Hollywood Athletic Club. The table decorations were in yellow and lavender which were also the decoration motif of the wedding celebration.

Mrs. Johnson is the great-great-grand daughter of Don Juan Bandini who came with his family to California from Peru in 1880. He owned at one time, through his marriage to Dolores Estudillo and his second marriage to Refugio Arguello, grants that extended from Santa Barbara to Guadalupe in Lower California.

One of the lovely affairs of recent date was the bridge-tea which Miss Eleanor Euwer, daughter of Mrs. Leah Euwer of Hollywood, gave for Miss Aileen Corfman of Salt Lake City who is visiting in Los Angeles. The hostess was graduated from the University of California last May and Miss Corfman claims the University of Utah as her alma mater.

Miss Katherine Thornberg, daughter of Dr. H. D. Thornberg, 8545 West Knoll Drive, Beverly Hills, who has been attending the summer session at the University of California at Los Angeles, was the honoree at a number of delightful affairs given by the Beverly Hills younger set. Miss Thornberg was graduated from the Illinois Women's College in 1929 and since then has been making her home in Rochester, Ind.

A recent graduate of the Marymount School, who will enter the University of California at Los Angeles this month, is Miss Margaret Morgan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Morgan of Kenwood avenue.

Two graduates of the Orton school who will enter William and Mary College this month are Miss Frances Stoner, daughter of Mrs. Julia Stoner, 430 North Sycamore avenue and Miss Ellen Stevens, the daughter of Bishop and Mrs. W. Bertrand Stevens. Miss Stevens has been touring Europe with her parents. While in England, she attended a garden party given by King George and Queen Mary.

Miss Dorothy King, president of Xi chapter of Zeta Tau Alpha at the University of Southern California, entertained Friday with a bridge-tea honoring a number of incoming students and members of the sorority.

The University of Southern California will add to its ranks this fall Miss Grace Baash, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Baash, who has recently returned from Paris where she passed a year in study at College Montmorency. Mrs. Baash went to New York to meet her daughter and together they visited in Gotham for ten days before sailing for Havana.

Miss Baash was the honoree at a dinner given recently by Mrs. Bill Henry at Huntington Park.

Yesterday's Wedding

A charming wedding of yesterday afternoon, one of the first of the autumn season, was that of Miss Ann Fontron, who became the bride of William E. Forbes at 4 o'clock in All Saints' Church, Beverly Hills.

The marriage lines were read by Rev. M. L. Kain of San Diego.

Given in marriage by her father, Louis E. Fontron, the lovely bride was attended by her sister, Miss Elisabeth Fontron and Mrs. James W. Lloyd. Ned Marr assisted Mr. Forbes as best man, while Robert B. Forbes, Jr., brother of the bridegroom, Fred Meyer Jordan and Sidney E. Clark were the ushers.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Forbes were graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles two years ago, where Mrs. Forbes was a member of Kappa Alpha Theta and in her senior year was president of her sorority. Mr. Forbes is a member of Beta Theta Pi. Mrs. Forbes was graduated also from Marlborough School.

Leaving immediately after the wedding for a honeymoon in the north, Mr. and Mrs. Forbes will return to make their home in this city.

Still From Europe

Mr. and Mrs. G. Von Brecht and daughter, Miss Virginia Von Brecht of Hollywood, who have been on an extended tour of Europe after spending a fortnight at the Hotel Continental, Paris, sailed from Cherbourg aboard the liner Bremerie, August 27. Upon their arrival in New York they will motor to California.

Honoree

A number of attractive social affairs are being planned this month in honor of Miss Frances Fink, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Fink of Franklin avenue, Hollywood, whose marriage to Gilbert Kurland,

PROMINENT STUDENTS MARRIED

Honeymoon Passed in San Francisco

[Ray Huff studios]

Mrs. Ralph Huston

Of interest in collegiate circles is the wedding of Miss Dorothy Penstamaker, daughter of Mrs. Harry Simpson, 711 North Occidental Boulevard, to Ralph Huston, which took place in the Wee Kirk o' the Heather, Glendale, last Tuesday. The bride and bridegroom were both prominent students at the University of Southern California, where the former was a member of Zeta Tau Alpha.

Mrs. Kay Wesling Trout, a sorority sister of the bride, and Mrs. David Goode, a member of Alpha Chi Omega at the University of Southern California, were bridal attendants. Kenneth Lichty, a Gamma Phi Epsilon Fraternity brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and Mathew Barr ushered.

Mr. and Mrs. Huston will pass their honeymoon in San Francisco.

Affairs of the Week

son of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Kurland, will be one of the events of the coming month. Mrs. L. Louis Waterman recently gave a charming bridge-luncheon at the Sea Breeze Beach Club honoring Miss Fink which was one of the most colorful beach affairs of the late summer season.

Return From Trip

Mrs. A. L. Swobdi Meade, 336 South Manhattan Place, has returned from a trip to Toronto, where she visited Col. and Mrs. William Eaton and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Glendenning.

Former Residents

Miss Stella P. Harris and her mother, Mrs. Rosemary Harris of Oak Park, Ill., former residents of Los Angeles, recently returned for a brief visit with relatives and friends. They left Thursday for the Grand Canyon.

Marriage Solemnized

A recent wedding of interest to many in the Southland and in Arizona was that of Miss La Verne Rodee of Tucson, and Milton B. Morse of Phoenix, which took place at the home of the bride's parents in Tucson.

Both the bride and bridegroom were prominent on the campus of the University of Arizona, where they were graduated recently.

They are now honeymooning at various points on the Coast, including Coronado. The bridegroom is the brother of Bertram Earle Morse of Hollywood, who also distinguished himself at the University of Arizona.

Complimentary Affairs

Many lovely parties are being given in honor of Miss Hazel Hayes, dramatic soprano, who has returned for a visit in Hollywood after a six weeks' sojourn in Denver, where she visited her father, W. W. Hayes, president of the Farmers' and Merchants' State Bank.

Married Recently

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wilson, 703 Catalina street, announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Marjorie Wilson, to Frank Summers. The marriage was solemnized in Santa Ana, August 22. Mr. and Mrs. Summers will make their home in Los Angeles after the 18th inst.

Visit New York

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Broodeen of Carthay Circle, who have been visiting in Washington, D. C., as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Clifford Burke, left the capital city recently for a motor trip to New York. They will visit Lake George, Cape Cod and Boston before returning home.

Elaborate Dinner

Honoring Mrs. Mary Elyse Touraine, who is departing for New York, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Zellerbach of the Beverly Wilshire Hotel entertained fifty guests at an elaborate dinner, recently. Mrs. Touraine is planning to visit her uncle, Paul Monroe, who is a doctor of scientific research, and is at present connected with the Rockefeller Institute, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Maxwell Touraine Bradley of Washington, well known in society circles of Europe and America.

Moore-Skinner

At a quiet and impressive ceremony recently, Miss Doris Florence Moore, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Frank Nesbit Moore of Detroit, became the bride of Lloyd V. Skinner, son of Mr. and Mrs. V. L. Skinner, San Diego. The ceremony, in the presence of both families and their friends, took place at the Immanuel Presbyterian Church with Rev. Raymond C. Acheson officiating.

The bride was charming in a gown of ivory crepe, hand blocked in pink roses and she carried a bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Bernethia Skinner, sister of the bridegroom, dressed in a long frock of lavender, and carrying an arm bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley, attended as bridesmaid. Charles Howard Shaw of Inglewood attended the bridegroom as best man.

A buffet lunch was served at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Harriet W. Clark, 3645 San Marino street, after which Mr. and Mrs. Skinner left on a honeymoon trip, and to their home in Pueblo, Colo.

Delta Delta Delta

At the Wilshire Country Club, on the afternoon of the 13th inst., the Los Angeles Alliance of Delta Delta Delta will inaugurate the coming season's activities with a bridge and tea. Mrs. A. E. Bridge-Tea and Shower

Many delightful affairs are being given for Miss Glodys Chalfant, who recently announced her coming marriage to Walter E. Preussing. Miss Katherine Funk entertained with a bridge-tea and shower for Miss Chalfant, and presented the gifts in clever manner. The gifts were found concealed in a miniature church perfectly equipped, including electrical chimes. The tea appointments were in pink and white.

Neitzel-Staiger

At a beautiful and impressive ceremony August 27, Miss Lota Frances Neitzel, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Neitzel of 906 Fourth avenue, became the bride of Carl R. Staiger. The ceremony took place at St. Gregory's rectory with Rev. Victor Follen officiating in the presence of 150 guests.

Given in marriage by her brother, Earl Neitzel, the bride was charming in a gown of white satin with a tulle veil. Her bouquet was of white roses. Mrs. Alexander Robertson and Mrs. Milton L. Bradford, the bride's attendants were gowned alike in frocks of French voile made robe de style. Mrs. Robertson wore melon shade and Mrs. Bradford, green, and both carried bouquets of sweet peas. Alexander Robertson served as best man.

A reception was held at the bride's home with the families, attendants and intimate friends as guests. Following a honeymoon which is being spent at Lake Tahoe, Mr. and Mrs. Staiger will be at home at 8557 Alcott.

Pebble Beach House Party

Entertaining at their Pebble Beach home during the California golf tournament are Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crocker. Their house guests include Mr. and Mrs. Jerd Sullivan, Mr. and Mrs. Blair Foster and Miss Frances Loomis. Recently Mr. and Mrs. Crocker entertained their guests and a number of others, including Miss Josephine Grant and Mr. Leon Walker at supper at San Clemente Lake in the Carmel Valley. Boating, fishing and riding were enjoyed.

Bridge-Luncheon

Among the attractive luncheons of recent date was that given by Mrs. H. Bruno Jones, complimenting Mrs. R. P. Craig of Nashville, Tenn., at the Garden of Allah in Hollywood.

After luncheon, bridge was played in the lovely patio. The guests were Mmes. D. Irwin Smith, J. L. Jarvis, D. Reed, John Dreiss, Mrs. O. Dasnoyers, Granville Harris and R. P. Craig.

Composer and Bride Honored

Mrs. Loti Haggemann of North Orange Drive and Miss Lucile De Wolfe entertained recently in honor of Guty Cardenas, young composer of Mexico, and his bride. Mr. Cardenas gave an entertaining demonstration of American jam as compared with that of Mexico. His singing and guitar improvisations were the feature of the evening. Those present were Don De Wolfe, Terry Spencer, Messrs. and Mmes. M. M. Mense, Von Rede, and the Misses Olive Meehan and Christine De Wolfe.

At the Plaza Hotel

A number of distinguished persons dined at the Hollywood Plaza Wednesday night and afterward attended the Spanish ball given at the hotel. Among them were Mrs. Frederick H. Haywood of New York, the Marquis De Albornoz, Carl Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Biery and Mme. Mabel Du Rose. Carol Molin's orchestra played in the patio beside the fountain aglow with gayly colored lights and the noted Alvarado and his partner gave a tango and Apache dance. Mrs. Harlette Mahler presided as hostess.

Gerlach-McKie

The Wee Kirk o' the Heather was the scene of a pretty wedding, August 28, when Miss Violet Gerlach, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Gerlach, became the bride of Robert McKie with Rev. William Fleetwood of the All Saints Church of Beverly Hills officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was lovely in ivory satin, with a long veil of net. She carried a shower of white roses, orchids and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids were all gowned in pastel shades of net and carried pastel shades of sweet peas. They were the Misses Neva Wrenn, Dorothy Gerlach, Alliene Crocker and Preda Stowe. Charles Gerlach attended the bridegroom as best man.

Immediately following a reception held at the home of the bride's parents, 5426 Virginia avenue, Hollywood, Mr. and Mrs. McKie motored north for a brief honeymoon and will live in Los Angeles on their return.

Mr. McKie was graduated from University of California at Los Angeles and is a member of Alpha Delta Tau Fraternity.

Fraternity Dance

One of the most colorful affairs of the younger set recently was the dinner-dance given by the Tau Delta Phi Fraternity of U.S.C. in the new supper room of the Sea Breeze Beach Club.

The guests were seated around a large U-shaped table, which was profusely decorated with pink and yellow sweet peas and roses. Hand-monogrammed compacts were presented to each of the feminine guests. Dancing was enjoyed to the music of Maurice's Sea Breeze Beach Club orchestra.

Covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. Harry Edelson, Misses Maxine Whitman, Morine Kates, Rose Fink, Josephine Gans, Beatrice Adelstein, Effie Rosen, Ethel Kelso, Vera Riskind, Gertrude Wilensky, Rose Wilensky, Gertrude Phillips, Messrs. Sherman Grancel, Jack Shuken, Sam Miller, Morris Browda, Jerome Desson, Raymond Pepp, Jack Altschul, Edward Wilensky, Ben Frenner, Harold Feldman and Henry Kauffman.

Mrs. Murray J. Patterson of Carmel by the Sea entertained recently with a novel bridge-luncheon at the club honoring Mrs. Fred Schildwachter of Beverly Hills.

Tables were placed under big beach umbrellas at the water's edge. A plunge in the surf served as an appetizer for the luncheon. A profusion of summer blossoms in all their glorious shades adorned the tables.

Covers were laid for Mmes. T. L. Connell, L. P. Leighton, James Morgan, Peter McTavish, Foster L. Lindley, C. K. Addiston, Robert Nordyke, L. M. De Masters, F. R. Lincoln and C. N. Marquald.

Returned to Hollywood

Capt. and Mrs. Lawrence Clarkson recently returned from an extended honeymoon trip through the Northwest. They will make their home at 515 North Larchmont Boulevard, Hollywood. The wedding, which took place last month at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather, was one of the most colorful social events of the summer season.

The bride, who was formerly Miss Lydia Jane Siemens, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Siemens of 4476 Maplewood Place and is a prominent member of the younger social set of Hollywood. She was graduated from the University of Washington and this year obtained her master's degree in sociology at U.S.C.

Capt. Clarkson, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clarkson of Newburyport, Mass., is a graduate of Dartmouth College, where he was a well-known figure in athletics.

Bridge Luncheon at Cafe

Mrs. Fred Javis of Mexico City was the honoree at a unique bridge-luncheon given by Mrs. Frederick Leslie Swope of North Gardner avenue, Hollywood, in the French Room of the Montmartre Cafe recently.

The national colors of the United States and Mexico were utilized in the color scheme with tiny flags of the two nations presented to each guest as souvenirs.

Among the guests present were Mmes. J. P. Lester, T. L. Weinland, Joseph Murdock, William J. Logan, C. Wilkson Cavanaugh, Fred T. Loomis, C. M. Maude, Peter Forde, Harry Davies and Oscar Lubin.

Informal Dinner

Honoring Capt. and Mrs. Truman Boudinot of Fort Clark, Tex., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Henry Houck entertained twelve guests with an informal dinner recently at their home on Maryland Drive.

The guests were seated at small tables in the patio and dining-room, each table lovely with a centerpiece of orchid and gold asters banked around tall taper candles.

The dinner marked the last of many charming affairs honoring Capt. Boudinot and his wife, who, with their son Truman, Jr., have been the house guests for the past two months of Capt. Boudinot's parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Boudinot. The Boudinots are returning to Fort Clark, where Capt. Boudinot is stationed.

39-inch CREPE SATIN (weighted) is in pastel, sports and dark colors. $1.95 a yard.

39-inch CREPE SATIN—pure silk, pure dye—celebrates the 15-Years-on-7th-Street Sale by being marked at $3.45 a yard.

MARILLYN CREPE DE CHINE is always a delight to the eye. Of heavy quality, yet specially priced. $1.95 yard.

SECOND FLOOR

Chiffon Velvet, $3.95

WHERE fashionable women come together, for bridge or dancing, velvet costumes will be noted. All silk erect-pile velvet has unobtrusive elegance—soft, lustrous, vibrant with the play of light and shade. 39 inches wide. Many colors. Underpriced at $3.95 a yard.

SECOND FLOOR

Mirrokrepe, $3.15

THIS crepe satin is highly important for formal afternoon and evening dresses. Pastel, bright and dark colors give a wide diversity of choice. Mirrokrepe is 39 inches at $3.15 a yard.

SECOND FLOOR

Flat Crepe for Day and Evening, $2.45

The traveler, the woman who entertains a great deal, the girl still in college—all consider a flat crepe frock indispensable to their activities. The flat crepe in the Sale is pure silk and pure dye. White, black and Fall colors. 39 inches wide. During this sale, $2.45.

SECOND FLOOR

Wool "Leda" From France $6.45

THIS imported fabric, exclusive with J. W. Robinson Co. in this city—is one of the most popular weaves for dress coats. It is similar to velvet in finish. 52 inches wide. $6.45 yard.

Wool Georgettes, $3.45

DARK green, dark blue and other wanted colors are shown in the 54-inch wool georgette. Small checks are available, as well as the plain georgette. $3.45.

Frisko is especially liked for sports and street wear. Plain weave. 54 inches. $3.45 yard.

Wool Broadcloth, $4.45

THIS broadcloth is of a weight adapted for wear in Southern California. It is spotproof, being sponged at the mill, at $4.45 a yard.

SECOND FLOOR

SECOND FLOOR—WASH GOODS

Padded Robes of Gay Cheney Prints, $12.75

ONE robe is fashioned of satin in modernistic print, with enough black in the print to give it character. It has a semi-shawl collar and is mull lined.

Another robe of Cheney satin that promises equal pleasure to the wearer because of its uniqueness has a Copen blue ground. Horizontal stripes have clusters of colors, predominantly green and yellow. A Johnny collar and cord sash are further details.

Many other padded robes or satin are shown in this brand new, but low-priced, collection. All sizes. $12.75.

FOURTH FLOOR

Night Gowns, $9.75

The better underwear, represented in this group, introduces new styles each season. The designers create new applications of lace, new treatment of neckline, armhole, lower edge. The result: Many refreshing innovations.

GOWNS AT $9.75 are of French finished crepe, ninon and triple voile. Some have Empire waist effects.

FOURTH FLOOR—LINGERIE SECTION

Perfumes and Powders

1-ounce Bottle of Houbigant's Perfumes in odors of La France Rose, Subtility, Le Temps de Lilas, Mon Boudoir, Quelques Violettes and Premier Noir, at $1.95 a bottle.

Houbigant's Gift Sets for the bath containing Bath Tablets, Talcum, Toilet Water and Soap, all in Quelques Fleurs odor, at $3.75 a set.

Houbigant's Quelques Fleurs Face Powder in large size boxes, in shades of naturelle and rachel, at $1.00 a box.

French Embroidery $6.50 Yd.

THE "lingerie" touch is a vogue that grows amazingly, as the feminine trend becomes more entrenched in the mode. This embroidery is skillfully made by French needlewomen. Some pieces are combined with English laces. Edges and motif effects make this embroidery adaptable to any style of trimming.

Widths are 5 to 8 inches. Specially priced, $6.50

Alencon Lace, $3.95 yd.

THE popularity of Alencon lace is almost beyond precedent. It is shown in a number of carefully selected patterns, edges, insertions, finished bands and points. All are in fine designs and thread-run effect. 3 to 12 inches wide. Priced for the Sale, $3.95 a yard.

Chantilly Lace, $3.95

THIS filmy lace may be made into the airy evening gown for the debutante or the afternoon or evening gown of the matron.

The flouncings are 27 to 36 inches wide and come in black, beige, white and some colors $3.95 yard.

72-Inch Tulle, $1.25 Yd.

TULLE gives the misty, cloudy effect in the most approved manner. Pleatings and ruchings are also made of this sheer material.

Colors are green, peach, yellow, white, black, gray, red, blue, beige, ivory, French blue, gold and others. $1.25 yard.

A Sale of Real Lace, Half Price

SECOND FLOOR

Imported Embroidered Neckwear

A BEAUTIFUL Neckwear, imported from Europe, is made of fine batiste embroidery or a combination of batiste and Alencon lace. Attractive collar shapes are displayed, including bib and panel effects as well as the regular shapes in collar and cuff sets. White, Paris or ecru tints may be selected. Prices are $8.50, $12.50 and $18.50.

Imported Blousettes, Beaded, $14.50

Exquisite Blousettes are of imported georgette, beaded with small pearl chalk beads in different colors. They are fashioned with round or V necks and artistic designs are portrayed by the beading. These blousettes are suitably worn with quite formal afternoon costumes of heavy crepe or velvet. In white and eggshell, priced at $14.50.

Satin Blousettes, Some Short Sleeved, $3.95

Satin is a popular material for fall blousettes, combining nicely as it does with either silk or wool costumes. These blousettes, in sleeveless or short sleeve styles, are of good quality satin in round or V neck styles, trimmed with fagoting, jabots, tucks or small bows. In white, nude, beige and pink, priced at $3.95.

Imported Scarfs $6.50

COLORS to harmonize with the various shades of Fall costumes are found in these hand-painted, imported Scarfs. The designs are colorful, decorating scarfs 36 inches square, or oblong scarfs, 58 inches in length. All hems are neatly hand-rolled. Priced at $6.50.

Silk Scarfs $2.95

DRESSMAKER Scarfs are made double, plain on one side and with bright hand-painted designs on the other. Some are finished with plain ends, others with fringed ends. These scarfs display the rich colors of Fall and are a smart complement of the sports or street costume. Priced at $2.95.

FIRST FLOOR—NECKWEAR

Women's Garside Shoes $12.85 Pair

IT is fitting that Garside shoes should appear in this same Sale. They speak of inbred quality, making an appeal that endures. Garside shoes assembled at this exceptional price are:

OPERA PUMPS in navy blue kid, brown kid, patent and black matt kid, all with high Spanish Louis heel. $12.85.

ONE STRAP in brown kid or patent. 2-inch Spanish heel. $12.85.

Four-eyelet blucher Oxford in brown kid or black matt kid. Cuban heel. $12.85.

Millinery $12.50

HATS of soleil and ermine finish are designed in intriguing new shapes for Fall. In this assortment, the price for the 15-Years-on-7th-Street Sale is $12.50.

A smart and youthful note is the extremely shallow brim, the hat being worn far off the brow, with perhaps an inch of hair showing. The draped effect at the side in the semi-beret style is also popular, being trimmed with part ribbon bows or loops of self-material.

Flat ostrich quills or curved, close-adhering feathers are a smart trimming, often in another tone of the same color as the hat.

Ribbon facing, narrow brims or ribbon banding the forehead just beneath rolled back brims are flattering effects. Velvet or lace insets are seen on more formal types of hats.

Black, shades of brown, cricket green, navy, winestone, copperglo and beige are shown in hats sized from 21½ to 23, priced at $12.50.

THIRD FLOOR

What Hostesses Have Been About Lately

summer home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Spencer of Los Angeles, was the scene of a delightful house party given recently by their daughter, Miss Hazel Spencer.

Motor boating, swimming, dancing and moonlight canoeing made the week-end a happy time.

Guests bidden were the Misses Nadine Brehm, Dorothy McCall, Grace Sugars, Ethel Whitlock, Roberta McPherrin, Ellen Pearson, Margaret Whidden, Mary Roberts, Adrienne Fortune, Mavis Brehm; the Messrs. Ralph Demmon, Douglas Moore, Henry Stonebreker, Ray Lewellyn, Tom Ritchie, Dean Sheldon, William Finn, Frank Adams, William King, Harold Miller, Maurice Koeberle and Mr. and Mrs. George Peterman.

Returns Home

After a three months' tour of Europe, Miss Roberta Persinger will return home within the next few days. Miss Persinger is a student at Holmby College and is a member of Alpha Beta Gamma Sorority.

Dinner Party

Mr. and Mrs. Sylvain Noack of 120 South Oxford avenue, entertained recently Mr. Enrique Arbos, noted musical conductor of Madrid, and Mrs. Arbos, with a delightful dinner party.

Those bidden were Dr. and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Frankel, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Levy, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Heartt Dreyfus, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Verbeck, Mr. and Mrs. Michel Tuniga, Dr. Samuel Marcus and Mr. Lajos Shuk.

Hotel Del Monte Guests

Many notables and guests from Los Angeles spent the week-end holiday at Del Monte during the amateur golf championship. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. John E. Turton and Miss Betty Turton, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Burt, Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Buckner, R. D. Scheller, R. M. Irving and Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Hessell.

Formal Dinner-Dance

Members of Kappa Sigma Alpha Sorority of Santa Monica and their escorts entertained with a formal dinner-dance recently at the Deauville Beach Club, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Hauge. Large pink dahlias and tea roses centered the table.

The party included the honor guests, Misses Gwendolyn Dowling, Peggy Hughes, Perdyl Baker, Mildred Bowens, Eunice Boyer, Peggy Henderson, Maxine Fish, Lieut. Fred Maxwell, Messrs. Robert Reep, Don Hinkel, Charles Lyall, Tony Walyhaub and Fred Janies.

Rushee Luncheon

The Alpha Beta Gamma Sorority of Holmby College entertained at the Roosevelt Hotel recently with a luncheon for twenty rushees. The table was beautifully decorated in green and gold, the sorority colors. Thirty rushees will share the hospitality of the sorority, when the latter will entertain at a breakfast at the Club Casa del Mar, the 11th inst.

Rose Glass Shower and Bridge

Complimentary to Mrs. Lynn Wightman, whose marriage to Dr. F. Lynn Wightman was solemnized last Friday at the Immanuel Presbyterian Church, Mrs. Wilson McGuire and Mrs. Howard Baker entertained recently with a rose glass shower and bridge at the home of Mrs. McGuire on Maryland Drive.

The clever score cards of ships were made by the hostesses and the table decorations carried out the same motif. Each place at the table was marked with a red candy heart anchored to a honeymoon ship used as a centerpiece.

Those bidden were Mmes. Roy Daniel, Harold Brown, Kenneth Bishop, Bruce Weenhold, Beaufort Stallcup, Wendell Hubbard, Glen Lane, Alfred Hanson, Justine Van Aort, and the Misses Mary Caffray, Alma Reinhardt, Esther Beck, Vera Waterman, Jewel Smith and Monita Johnson.

Traveling in Europe

During the summer months, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Bryan, 1143 Magnolia avenue, have been traveling in Europe visiting the following countries: Scotland, England, Holland, Belgium, Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria, Switzerland, Italy and France. They sailed from Cherbourg yesterday.

Dawson-Kruft

Included among the charming weddings of the past month was that of Miss Frances L. Dawson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Dawson of Compton, who became the bride of William Kruft, son of Mrs. Mary Kruft, also of Compton, at 8 o'clock, August 29, at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather. Rev. W. A. Jennings, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Hemet, officiated in the presence of 100 guests.

The bride was lovely in a white beaded satin gown, and carried a shower of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

Miss Frances Warren and Janet Nichols, dressed in light yellow chiffon, and Miss Ruth Jacobson and Miss Mary Makin, in light orange chiffon, all carrying pink roses and carnations were charming as bridesmaids.

Everett Pyle served as best man and Fred Culbertson and Dale Rolph were ushers.

Mr. and Mrs. Kruft motored to Lake Tahoe and Yosemite immediately following the reception which was given at the home of the bride's parents, and will be at home to their friends at 510 North Arcadia avenue, Compton, the 15th inst.

To Tour the World

Angelenos who will leave Los Angeles for a tour around the world the 17th inst. aboard the Tatzuta Maru are Mrs. William Hamilton, Mrs. Fannie B. Meister, and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Goldsmith, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ross, Mr. Charles C. Wheelock and others.

The party will visit Honolulu, Japan, China, the Philippines, Java, Malay Penninsula, India, Egypt, the Holy Land, Cyprus, Turkey, Greece and upon arrival at Naples they will make an extended tour through Europe by automobile.

Author Honored

One of the charmingly appointed affairs of recent date to which nearly 100 guests were bidden was the reception at the home of Mrs. Malcolm Stuart Boylan, in honor of Mr. Boylan's mother, Mrs. Louis N. Geldert of Memphis, Tenn.

Mrs. Geldert, an author of note, is known in literary circles as Grace Duffie Boylan. The guests included many well known writers, among whom were Sybil Wilbur, Ralph Waldo Trine, Onota Watonna, as well as a coterie of friends who were associated with Mrs. Geldert in literary work in Chicago.

Assisting the hostess were Miss Clover Roscoe, daughter of the honoree; Mrs. Wesley Halliburton of Memphis, Mrs. Frances McCardell of New York, Mrs. Ernest McGaffey and Mrs. Frances Frakes.

What Hostesses Have Been About Lately

At the Cliff

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Lanier of Los Angeles are guests at the Cliff Hotel in San Francisco, where among other Angelenos are registered Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Goodno and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Collins, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Clement, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Burr, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Ilsley and Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Dixon.

Easterners Visit Son

Maj. and Mrs. Barclay H. Warburton of New York, Philadelphia and Palm Beach, who recently visited here, have gone on to Hotel del Coronado to visit their son, Barclay H. Warburton, Jr., who is taking an advance course in flying at Ryan School.

Mrs. Warburton is the daughter of the late John Wanamaker of Philadelphia; Maj. Warburton, before retiring from business some years ago, was publisher of the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

Begonia Party

One of the most unusual garden parties of the season was that given by Capt. and Mrs. John D. Fredericks at their estate in Beverly Hills, recently. Tea was served in the patio, while the guests were escorted to the gardens to view the largest and most beautiful collections of begonias in the world.

The garden is the hobby of Mrs. Fredericks, and she is particularly proud of her begonias because they have all been raised from seed. She is now personally superintending the propaganda of several hundred begonia plants from leaves under glass.

Miss Burdick Honored

In honor of Miss Virginia Burdick who will become the bride of H. David Gordon in the near future, Miss Gwendolen Kik entertained the bridal party at a luncheon at the Bullock's Wilshire Tea Room recently.

The guests were: Mrs. Lewis E. Wilson, Miss Mary Main, Mrs. C. A. Littleton, and Mrs. D. F. Maitland.

Mrs. Max L. Gordon and daughter, Mrs. Lewis E. Wilson, also entertained recently at the home of the latter, 3248 Lexington avenue, with a delightful luncheon-shower in honor of Miss Burdick.

Tour of Europe

Dr. and Mrs. Moses Scholtz, 1920 Hobart Boulevard, have just returned from a two months' tour of Europe. Dr. Scholtz participated in the International Dermatologic congress in Copenhagen during his visit.

Stopp-Eirod

One of the charming weddings of the season was that of Miss Lula Mae Eirod, who became the bride of Edward John Stopp August 27 at the home of Mr. Stopp's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Eddy, 1348 North Columbus street. Rev. W. E. Edmonds, pastor of the Glendale Presbyterian Church, officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was attractive in eggshell satin. She carried a bouquet of orchids, lilies of the valley and white roses. Mrs. Eddy attended as matron of honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Stopp motored north for their wedding trip, planning to stop at Carmel and Monterey.

Mrs. Laub Returns

After a most delightful vacation spent in the Northwest and Alaska, Mrs. Henry Laub of South Catalina street is home again.

Mrs. Laub was accompanied by her mother, Mrs. C. B. Lumsden, and Carlyle Butler Lumsden.

Fenstamaker-Huston

Miss Dorothy Fenstamaker became the bride of Ralph Huston at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather last Tuesday evening, Frank Dyer, D.D., of the American Catholic Church, Los Angeles, officiating.

The bride was charming in a periwinkle blue crepe gown with hat and slippers to match. She wore a beautiful shoulder corsage of gardenias and lilies of the valley. Mildred C. Goode, matron of honor, was gowned in pansy chiffon velvet, carrying pink rosebuds. Kenneth Lichty served as best man to the groom.

Mrs. Huston was graduated from Westlake School for Girls and attended the University of Southern California, and is a member of Zeta Tau Alpha. Mr. Huston was graduated from the University of Southern California and is affiliated with Gamma Epsilon Fraternity. Mr. Huston was former editor of the Daily Trojan and Pigskin Review.

Mr. and Mrs. Huston will live in Los Angeles after a brief honeymoon in San Francisco.

Glassware Shower

Mrs. Clarence M. Kellstrom of De Longpre avenue gave an amber glassware shower recently in honor of Miss Margaret Croft, whose wedding to Ronald M. De Long will be solemnized the 10th inst. at St. Mary of the Angels Episcopal Church, the Rev. Neal Dodd officiating. Mrs. Kellstrom was assisted in receiving by her mother, Mrs. Charles B. Kuhns of North Hollywood.

A color scheme of orchid and gold was followed in flowers which decorated the tables and in the favors. Ice cream in moulds of gold-en slippers was served and the gifts were revealed in a beautiful large golden slipper presented to the honored guest.

Mrs. Kellstrom, who will attend Miss Croft at the wedding as matron of honor, was hostess to Mrs. William Croft, mother of the honor guest; Mrs. E. Morrow, Mrs. E. Watson, Mmes. Clifton Bowers, William Wilmot, L. J. La Plante, Cecil Smallwood, M. Sherwood, George Nell, C. L. Kellstrom, C. B. Kuhns, the Misses Madge Tucker, Rose Hamilton, Frances Cooke, Una Davis, Helen King, Cynthia Haldeman, Mary Dinning, Louise Moody and Jean Baker.

At Hotel del Coronado

A beautifully appointed dinner was given at the Hotel del Coronado recently by members of the younger set from Los Angeles over the Labor Day holiday. The guests included the Misses Lorene Soden, Martha Soden, Jane Baldwin, Natalie O'Maley, Catherine Russell, Betty Wyatt, Louise Walsh, Louise Kirksey, Lillian Thompson and Mrs. Irving Levy and the Messrs. Al Brown, Llano Briggs, Dudley Wright, Bob Schaffer, Dick Stubbs, Charles Schmeltzer, Ivan Massey, Arthur Engle, Irving Levy and Roland Reinholdt.

Returning Travelers

After spending the summer in Germany, Leon Rains and his daughter have returned and are stopping at Hotel Roosevelt.

Honoring Congressman

In honor of Congressman and Mrs. W. E. Evans of Glendale a delightfully informal party was given recently at the Maryland Hotel. Judge George E. Waldo served as toastmaster and among the guests were Judge and Mrs. Edwin F. Hahn, Judge and Mrs. William W. Haslett, Judge Elliott Gibbs, Mrs. Florence Collins Porteh, A. Burlingame Johnson, Mrs. and Mrs. Clarence E. Fleming, Col. William M. Griffith, John W. Wood, Mr. and Mrs. Millbank Johnson, Judge Russell Morton, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tichnor, William E. Prather and Ellis Bishop.

Engagement Announced

Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Dawson of Winnipeg, Man., announce the engagement of their daughter, Gladys Ellen, to Paul D. Crunk of Los Angeles. The wedding will take place at the home of the bride's parents the 28th inst.

Marriage Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene J. Meyberg announce the marriage of their daughter Carolyn to Morris Sichel at noon Thursday, August 28, at the family residence, 735 South Catalina street. Only members of the immediate family were present.

Mrs. Sichel was graduated from Mills College after attending Los Angeles High School. Mr. Sichel was formerly of Cincinnati.

Mr. and Mrs. Sichel are now honeymooning in the North and upon their return will make their home in Los Angeles, the native city of the bride.

D.A.R. Bridge-Tea

Hollywood chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, have been invited by their regent, Mrs. John Whittier Howe Hodge, to a bridge-tea for the benefit of the student loan fund Friday, the 19th inst., at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Hostesses of the affair, which promises charm and eclat, are Mrs. William A. Nickell, Mrs. Florence Banks, Mrs. L. Frank Baum, Mrs. Edward C. Chamberlin, Mrs. Loren B. Curtis, Mrs. Jay F. Herrington, Mrs. James

SEATTLE MAN CLAIMS BRIDE

Of interest to many in the Southland is the marriage of Miss Isabel Cherry, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Johnson Cherry of Cheviot Hills, to Maurice John Warnock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Warnock of Seattle, Wash., which was solemnized August 27 at the Wee Kirk o' the Heather, Glendale, with Dr. Roland D. Martin of the Palms Methodist Episcopal Church officiating.

Miss Rebecca E. Pilgrim of Oakmont, Pa., attended the bride as maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Katherine Hagler and Miss Winifred Sue Cherry. Kenneth Stevenson of Seattle served the bridegroom as best man and the ushers were Kenneth Tinney and Robert Gorman of Culver City.

The bride was graduated from Radcliffe College, Wis., and claims membership in Delta Gamma while Mr. Warnock's alma mater is the University of Oregon. He claims membership in Phi Kappa Psi and Alpha Kappa Psi.

Following the ceremony the bridal party was served a wedding breakfast at the California Country Club.

Trumbull-Owen

At St. James Episcopal Church in Wilshire Boulevard Miss Iris Electra Owen became the bride of Stuart Ellis Trumbull Tuesday evening, with Dr. Ray Miller reading the marriage lines. Cathedral candles on the altar and along the aisles enhanced the beauty of the stately setting, where masses of palms and salmon shades of gladioli were used effectively.

Ivory satin, fashioned on long lines and form fitting, was the material for the bride's gown and she wore a Normandy cap of tulle and orange blossoms extending in a long train. Her bouquet was of lilies of the valley and orchids.

Mrs. Stuart Menzies, matron of honor, and Miss Dorothy Joan Bowley wore gowns alike of chartreuse chiffon with small malines chapeaux to match. They carried arm bouquets of salmon-hued Talisman roses. The three bridesmaids, Miss Gertrude Casey, Miss Ruth Miller, Miss Mona Kanne and the matron, Mrs. Robert Reid, were attractive in yellow chiffon and large malines picture hats. They carried bouquets of yellow roses, yellow sweet peas and blue delphinium.

After the 20th inst., following a motor honeymoon in the northern part of the State, Mr. and Mrs. Trumbull will be at home to their friends at 6282 Sloat Drive, Carthay Center.

Dinner Last Evening

As a farewell courtesy to Capt. and Mrs. Truman Boudinot, who together with their son Thomas, Jr., have been visiting in this city, Mrs. Charles Henry Houck gave a dinner party last evening at her home in Maryland Drive. Covers were laid for twelve.

Capt. and Mrs. Boudinot, whose visit has been marked with extensive entertaining, have been the house guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. Boudinot, in West Thirty-sixth Place. They are returning to their home in Fort Clark, Tex., this week.

Miss Mary Louise Saenger

MISS MARY LOUISE SAENGER, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Saenger, 536 North Highland avenue, has chosen Saturday, October 4, as the date of her wedding with Vernon Brauer Sheblak. The St. James Episcopal Church will be the scene of the wedding and Rev. Ray O. Miller will officiate.

Attendants of the bride will be Miss Anna-Ewell Phillips, maid of honor, and Miss Virginia Sevier, Miss Lucille Umbdenstock, Miss Beatrice Brand and Miss Mary Ester Evens, bridesmaids. Raymond Wilson will serve the bridegroom as best man and the ushers will be Edwin Austin C. Hammond, Jr., John B. Brown, Jr., and Arthur Honog.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS of THE ARMY AND NAVY

One of the interesting additions to naval circles this season is Mrs. William D. MacDougall, wife of Rear-Admiral MacDougall who arrived at the harbor a short time ago and is making her headquarters at the Virginia Hotel. Rear-Admiral MacDougall, formerly in command of the Sixteenth Naval District and commandant of the Navy Yard at Cavite, has taken up his new duty as commander of the fleet base force aboard the flagship Procyon. Mrs. MacDougall sailed from the Philippines on the President Grant and stopped for a month in Japan before coming on the Coast. Early in September she plans to make a visit of several weeks in the East and upon her return will remain here for the winter.

One of the gay younger set affairs of recent date took place at the home of Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. Fred W. Connor, U.S.S. Nevada, when their eldest daughter, Miss Patricia Connor entertained at luncheon and bridge for Miss Marjorie Galbraith of Santa Monica who will be married to John Schaub September 13. Motoring from Santa Monica to enjoy the party were the Misses Marjorie Galbraith, Mary Lee, Doris Galbraith, Marguerite Dutton, Ruth Kay, Maxine Beeson, Helen Rigney and Miss Barbara Connor.

Visitors at Fort MacArthur recently included Col. and Mrs. William F. Herringshaw, U.S.A., who were guests at the quarters of Capt. and Mrs. Hugh Franklin Ewing. The Herringshaws have been making an extended motor tour of the Pacific southwest and are now en route to San Francisco, where they will sail on the transport Grant, September 10, for the Philippines. Col. Herringshaw, on duty at the Presidio for a year will be stationed in Manila.

Many newcomers are joining the San Pedro naval contingent for the fall months. At the Riviera on Point Fermin is Mrs. Walter P. Rodman who drove down from Valejo where Lieut. Rodman was formerly on shore duty and will make her home here while he is on board the U.S.S. Procyon. Their son, Rodney Quinn Rodman, at present visiting in Oregon with his uncle, Albert Austin, will join his parents in September and enter U.S.C. when the new semester opens.

Mrs. Melville Stuart Brown, wife of Commander Brown of the Saratoga, Miss Katherine Brown and Garrison Brown have returned to the harbor after a delightful two-day visit in Coronado. Mrs. Brown and her son were the guests of Capt. and Mrs. Frank McCrary and Miss Brown stopped at the home of Commander and Mrs. Jefferson Davis Smith. Among the many enjoyable affairs in which the McCrarys and their guest participated was a smart dinner party given by Capt. and Mrs. John Hornberger as a farewell to Capt. McCrary who is being detached from the naval air station to assume command of the plane carrier Saratoga, early in the fall. El Cordova was the setting for the dinner, the Hornbergers later taking their guests to their quarters at the air station for bridge. Invitations for the event were issued to Capt. and Mrs. McCrary, Mrs. Brown, Capt. and Mrs. Herbert E. Kays, Capt. and Mrs. Middleton S. Elliott, Capt. and Mrs. John B. Kauffman, Capt. and Mrs. E. D. McWhorter, Commander and Mrs. S. A. Clement, Commander and Mrs. Robert R. Paunack, Commander and Mrs. William L. Mann, Mrs. W. B. Broaddus, Mrs. G. L. Bryan and Mrs. W. Owens.

Visitors from Arkansas at the harbor are Maj. and Mrs. Melbourne M. Martin and their son Melbourne Jr., guests of Maj. Martin's brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Linthicum.

TIN-PAN ALLEY STILL WOBBLY

Fate of Musical Film-Fare Hangs in Balance

Composers Take Drubbing in Past Half-Year

Future, First, Songs Second, Maxium of Future

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

Is tin-pan alley stage a comeback in Hollywood, or is the movie musical through for good?

That is the much-vexed question at the moment in the capital of the song-writers have gone a fearful drubbing during half year and their ranks depleted by the housecleaning has taken place in the studios. per cent of the pictures produced last year were given a musical or semimusical background. At it is estimated that only 5 will have such embellishments. the song picture was at its there were approximately 130 and composers under contract the nine leading studios. films are scarcely half that and even these are viewing with great misgivings.

MUSIC MADNESS PASSES

Hollywood went music mad when sound pictures took hold. There was to be a song for every scene in all of the pictures. The producers rushed forward to an era of realistic operettas, musical comedies and even talked a little of grand opera. Today they have turned thumbs down on even the suggestion of such ventures.

The truth of the matter is that the majority of musical pictures, so-called, were flops at the box office. Due to such a stage that filmdom became positively afraid of the product. They retitled follies productions and shelved other productions that relied for their appeal on music. Even pictures with incidental music were referred to as "musical" comedies or dramas, or other people were featured besides the singing principals.

Now, at last, there seems to be a definite upturn in this form of production. The bottom, it is believed, has been struck, and the prospects are that other musicals will vanish altogether, or else, on a much improved basis, go forward again.

SONG HITS ENCOURAGE

One of the most encouraging signs is the success scored by the few talking screen plays. Hits of the year have been such selections as "Check," "Should I?" "Livin' in Sunlight, Lovin' in the Moonlight," "Happy Days," "How Am I Doin'?" "My Love Parade," "Ragamuffin Romeo," "Supposed in Monterey," "In My Little Hope Chest" and others. All of these have gone over very big with the dancing and record-buying public. Some of them have succeeded even in spite of the fact that the films were not in successful pictures.

It is conceded that there isn't so much wrong with the music itself, but rather the treatment of the music on

EXHIBIT OF SCULPTURE WILL OPEN

Prize-Winning Figures of Soap to be Displayed at Library Tomorrow

A small soap sculpture exhibition will be shown at the Central Library lecture and exhibits room from tomorrow to October 4, sponsored b ythe National Soap Sculpture Committee. The exhibition includes soap sculptures by professionals, and amateurs from all parts of the United States, Canada, Porto Rico, Hawaii and six foreign countries. Prizes were offered by the Procter & Gamble Soap Company from $500 in the professional class which went to Peter P. Ott of New York City down to honorable mention and $10 prizes for amateurs and a number of student scholarships for art schools. The contest has aroused much interest and is in its sixth year of exhibitions which are shown first at the American-Anderson Galleries in New York City and then taken on a traveling tour of the large cities of the country. Several Californians are among the prize winners.

INCIDENTALS HELP

"The success of any film depends not only on the principals in the cast, but also on what some might...cal incidentals," Green said. "Touches here and there add a distinction which in the long run is not overlooked. In the past I had a standing offer of a certain sum of money for any suggestion from any actor, electrician, cameraman, property men or their assistants which strengthened a particular bit of business as it was being filmed. I made it a rule to always listen to these men who, it may be interesting to know, frequently collected.

"If a man's suggestion was not feasible I would usually explain, in some way so as not to hurt his feelings, just why it was not. I have kept my assistant director for five years and I don't believe I have an enemy on my technical and working staff. Befriending the boys who watch scenes shot while hanging over the tops of the scenery, pays dividends."

The director is a calm-appearing man but works at fever heat on his job. Most of his pictures have been made in shorter time than you would think possible. He grumbles now and then over the shortness of time allowed him on a production and some day hopes to have four or five months in which to add all of the touches he thinks necessary.

Green started his career in 1912 as a jack of all trades on the old Selig studio lot. He, William Seiter and one or two others inaugurated the position of assistant director. After he became a full-fledged director he turned out several silent box-office hits, including "Sally," with Colleen Moore, "Little Lord Fauntleroy," with Mary Pickford, "Ella Cinders," and several Thomas Meighan vehicles. He is a native Californian, having been born in the village of Perris.

COUNTY TO SEE OWN ART

Display at Pomona will Include All Phases of Artistic and Craft Work Executed Here

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

Aspects of art in Southern California, seldom brought out on any other occasion, are revealed in the art exhibits at the Los Angeles County Fair to receive their ninth annual display from the 12th to 21st inst.

The aim is not so much to gather the choicest possible showing from an aesthetic standpoint—though the jurying is strict—but to show the people of Los Angeles county the work being done not alone by individuals but by the many educational groups.

Thus the various schools which specialize in some one craft such as ceramics, leather work, metal work or design, thanks usually to some gifted teacher, are to be represented in the craft display, which, under the disinterested and enthusiastic leadership of Miss Leta Horlocker has come to resemble a cross section of art-craft tendencies in Southern California.

Theodore B. Modra and Miss Horlocker have literally created these annual displays of art which are attended by huge crowds—last year more than 175,000 people visited the art building—and so successful have they proven as attractions that they receive more prize money and facilities each year. This year approximately $1000 was forthcoming.

It is the aim of the Fine Arts department to show these huge crowds how important a contribution to our community life is being made by the artist fraternity. All shades of art are shown. The goal of the Arts and Crafts department is to further the interest of manufacturers and consumers of useful articles in better designed objects of daily use and so this department includes not only articles of luxury but examples of inexpensive things made beautiful by the touch of the artist.

Etchings, pictorial photographs, glazed pottery, china, textiles, jewelry, batiks and book bindings are among exhibits in the craft department. Besides the distinctly professional work and that of the various art schools and public schools there are to be displays of needle work and craft work by art sections of the county's women's clubs, stressing the idea that art begins, not in the art gallery, but in the very fabric of home life. In the Fine Arts Hall paintings and sculpture will be shown.

To allot the various prizes in each division the following have been selected as judges: Theodore B. Modra, director; Leta Horlocker, curator; Florence Gendron, assistant; Frederick J. Schwankovsky, public schools; Belle Whitice, U. C. L. A.; Eugene Morahan, sculpture; Phil Townsend Hanna, prints; C. J. Marvin, pictorial photography; Andrew J. Bjurman, pottery. The jurors are not in competition for prizes.

M'CLINTICS CELEBRATE TOMORROW

Day will Bristle with Emotions for Director and Actress-Wife

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Tomorrow bristles with emotions for Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie McClintic in other matters—besides marking the opening of "The Dishonored Lady" at the Biltmore Theater.

For on this date, nine years ago, Guthrie McClintic and Katherine Cornell, two unknown youngsters, were married. Then, too, tomorrow means a reunion after three months of separation, for McClintic has been directing the Fox picture, "On Your Back," now at the Boulevard out here, and Miss Cornell has been touring with "The Dishonored Lady."

So that it was an eager, impatient husband who was discovered last week in a charming Beverly house.

Guthrie McClintic is one of the most successful stage directors. At 36 years of age he has the longest list of famous plays to his credit that any director could wish . . . beginning with "The Dover Road," for which he was financed by Winthrop Ames, as a reward of merit, after eight years' association with that gentleman in his Little Theater.

"The Dover Road" won Guthrie fame overnight as well as useful shekels. After that came "The Age of Innocence," "The Letter," "The Green Hat," "Saturday's Children," "Mrs. Partridge Presents," "The Shanghai Gesture," "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and some dozen others, including the remarkable play "Jealousy," in which he also acted the man's role. Last came this "Dishonored Lady," directed for his "Kitty" . . . e'er he came to Hollywood to try motion pictures.

So successful is this first picture, "On Your Back," with Irene Rich, that from now on Guthrie will spend his summers in Hollywood and his winters in New York. He does one more picture for Fox before returning east to put on two new plays.

The essential difference between directing plays and pictures is the importance of concentration, more to be crowded into a one-and-one-half-hour picture than a two-and-one-half-hour play. "But the difference is harder on the actor than the director," he says.

"I look for the day when writers will write direct for the screen, so that a story in all its details will represent a medium of expression for one mind. At present, of course, several people have a hand in a picture . . . author, scenario writer, dialogue man, gag man, etc. The result is pretty good, of course, but the one-mind idea should be a great improvement."

ACTORS DOUBLE AS DIRECTORS

Several Screen Thespians Adopt Megaphone

Tough Proposition, Declares Louis Wolheim

Lionel Barrymore Storied Studio Vogue

BY ELENA BOLAND

There has always been a lot of this and that said about actors. One of the heresies often repeated is that a film actor is nothing but the director's pawn. So to disprove this fallacy there may now be mentioned several more prominent screen thespians who have turned the tables and become directors. What is more, just to show they can do both, they are known even to direct themselves.

The latest to display his versatility is Louis Wolheim, who over on the R.-K.-O. lot has started direction on his first picture, "Sheep's Clothing." And one of the four in his cast is Hugh Herbert who, besides being in a similar dual capacity of actor-director, also thinks nothing of writing dialogue. He did it for this film.

TOUGH PROPOSITION

Wolheim, who has tackled anything from professor of mathematics to engineering, admits that directing one's self is about the toughest proposition he has ever attempted.

"This is my first picture and if it isn't good, it's my last. If, with all the assistance I have, I can't turn out a good story well told, there's no use for me to go on with directing. I can't tell yet how it will turn out. All I can say is that I feel like a prize fighter before he steps into the ring. I'm in the pink and I think I'll win."

Wolheim and Herbert seem, rather accidentally, to have fallen into a team relationship. As it is now in "Sheep's Clothing," "Louie" follows "Hughie's" dialogue (they also play opposite each other,) and "Hughie" takes "Louie's" direction. In their next picture Herbert will direct Wolheim. He did direct many of the more intimate scenes in Wolheim's last film, "Danger Lights," which is soon to be released, and he was responsible for the talk in that, too.

An actor stands a better chance of becoming a good director than does the layman, both these gentlemen agree.

"An actor is used to moods and he can sense the shadings of every role," Herbert declares. "And the main advantage he has over a director who has never acted, is that he is able to show his players how to do a scene which they may not understand through a verbal explanation."

Wolheim agrees with "Hughie" and adds another point.

"And one thing I learned early in the game is, that the good actor must always visualize an entire scene, as well as see himself in that scene. He becomes a third person who stands off watching himself act."

SHERMAN HAS DEVICES

R.-K.-O. has a third ambitious actor-director. He is Lowell Sherman, the acme of gentlemanly suavity. The studio is more than proud of Mr. Sherman's results in the field of direction and points to "Lawful Larceny" as an example of his thorough capability. Sherman, however, found it necessary to employ devices to get the effect perfect. One of them was an arrangement of special mirrors which he had so adjusted that while acting he could also keep an eagle eye on himself and see that he was doing what his directorial mind required.

But all the two and three-sided geniuses are not at R.-K.-O. Lionel Barrymore, it is believed, started this thing. He is credited with the direction of several features, "His Glorious Night" being the last.

Ramon Novarro has just recently started. He is telling himself what to do (and in Spanish) out at M.-G.-M. where he is making the Spanish version of "The Singer of Seville."

It is good to see the enthusiasm of these players as they attack the greater problems of direction. Their years of showmanship are counting now, where previously they had small opportunity. And should they keep on like this, doing first one thing then another, until each is taking the place of five men, who knows, actors may become the economic solution of the industry.

AWARD FOR BOWL WORK WITHDRAWN

Composition Committee Prize Not to be Made This Year

Gertrude Ross, chairman of the Hollywood Bowl prize composition committee, announces that no award will be made this year. The judges read carefully the eighty-three compositions submitted and eliminated all but six. These, in turn, were submitted to them for reconsideration and no agreement could be reached. They were submitted to another committee and the decision was reached that none of them quite reached the high standard set for Bowl performance.

Katherine Yarnell, who donated $5000 for five consecutive prizes for the Bowl, has consented to extend the prize another year, so that this year's prize will still be available. The offer for next year is for a symphonic work in any form. It is thought that by removing the limitation as to form composers will be freer to express themselves.

The prize for 1932 is now announced. It is to be for a symphony. Composers may obtain full details by writing the Hollywood Bowl office.

"MONTE CARLO" WELL RECEIVED

Lubitsch Direction Gives New Values

"Let's Go Native" Seems Old-fashioned

Mary Nolan Brilliant Hit in Mediocre Film

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive) Paramount achieved a brilliant opening for "Monte Carlo" at the Rivoli Theater last Thursday evening, preceding a run of continuous showings. Mary Brian was mobbed by autograph hunters whose intrepidity made it necessary for the actress to be spirited out of the auditorium by a side entrance to a mere taxi instead of the perfumed limousine we Broadway yokels prefer to see waiting for our ideal. Well received by the audience, the picture evoked estimable comment from the critics, who found it a diverting example of Ernst Lubitsch's skill as a director rather than wholly satisfying entertainment. For when the maximum enjoyment has been derived from the sly touches for which the director is famous, the remainder of the picture frequently is dull.

This indicates no lapse on the part of Mr. Lubitsch, but is rather because the story is feeble and the material at his command is not sufficiently evocative of more touches of his individuality. And while the scenes are attractive and have been staged with taste and originality, they are responsible for the lethargic pace at which the picture moves. The result, however pleasing, is distinctly unstimulating and encourages the thought that if Mr. Lubitsch had been free of the responsibility of dialogue and song he would have managed to turn out a sparkling picture in keeping with his best in the silent medium.

CHEVALIER MISSED

As it stands, "Monte Carlo" is musical comedy even though Mr. Lubitsch has striven valiantly to invest it with new values, and he has succeeded, too, but not enough to make his task effervesce. With a dynamic personality like Maurice Chevalier that quality would have been assured, but Jack Buchanan, ingratiating comedian that he is, fails to yield it.

Just why Mr. Buchanan, noted always as a dancer rather than a singer, is not permitted to shake a leg, must go into the tome that is filled with Hollywood's unanswered questions. Jeanette MacDonald is entirely expert and such succeeding picture shows her development as a comedienne. In this mood she is delightful. At least one critic goes on record with the rather surprising discovery that Claud Allister is the hit of the piece, but there is at least one other who can subscribe to no such opinion of an obsolete characterization long since outmoded even in musical comedy.

The same characterization is contributed by William Austin to "Let's Go Native" at the Paramount The-

HUSTON PROVES VERSATILE

Player Makes Leap from Characterization of Pancho Lopez to Abraham Lincoln

BY PHILIP K. SCHEUER

"As a man thinketh—" is no catchpenny phrase to Walter Huston, player of parts. A performer whose versatility is in such demand for the screen that he has just been compelled to cancel an engagement to act for Arthur Hopkins on the stage, who leaps brilliantly from such characterizations as Pancho Lopez, bad man, to Abraham Lincoln, good man, in the twinkle of an eye—this performer approaches each role from "the inside." The surface trappings follow—later.

"At once, I read a script through," said Huston. "I look for the true nature of the character I am to portray in what he says. A desperado such as Pancho Lopez, who coldly declares he would shoot a man down without compunction—and does—must have another 'side' somewhere. He cannot be all bad.

SHE LIKED HIM

"I read on. Ah, here it is! Lopez turns to the boy of the story ("The Bad Man.") 'You love theese girl?' he asks. The boy does. He turns to the girl. 'You love heem?' But the girl hesitates. 'I like him,' she says.

"Lopez calls in his first lieutenant—unscrupulous, vicious, repulsive. 'You mus' choose,' Lopez tells the girl, 'between thees two men.'

"The girl runs to the boy, clings to him.

"Lopez chuckles. 'For pleasure, a girl will go to the man she like,' he grins, 'but in danger to the man she really love.'

"So gradually Lopez's nature comes out. Merciless, cruel, he yet knows women, the heart.

"LIVING" MERE PUBLICITY

"On these hints an actor builds his character. I have no patience with the player who says he goes around for days 'living' a part. I think it's all publicity; unnecessary. If you first 'feel' the part and then add the outer trappings you can always get the feel of it again the moment you step into your costume. It works both ways, you see.

"Of course, a first impression is always the most vivid. Holbrook Blinn, a great artist, created Pancho Lopez in 'The Bad Man.' Indeed, I understand he humanized him. Shredied the role that had originally been serious, straight. In following Blinn I would have to be the Pancho Lopez of tradition without merely imitating him; you see the difficulty. Naturally I want my Lopez to stand on his own feet."

Currently at Warners' Downtown Theater is "The Bad Man," with Walter Huston. Patrons of the theater are discovering how successful Huston has been. A little later it will come that other characterization, Lincoln, in D. W. Griffith's production of that name. Still later there will be "the best dam' caballero" of "The Dove," with Dolores Del Rio; much different, Huston says, from Pancho Lopez, so that he will find a new pleasure in making him as very different as possible.

Walter Huston never played a "gentleman" in all his stage career. That happened when he went over to the talkies. The film was "The Lady Lies;" and Huston grew a mustache for it.

But if he had never been a gentleman, he had been everything else under the sun. He made his New York debut in "Mr. Pim" as an underdog, a poor guy with an inferiority complex who sold canned goods. This was in 1923. The following year he appeared briefly in a failure, "The Easy Mark." One day he met Kenneth Macgowan on the street and was persuaded to enter "Desire Under the Elms" as Ephraim Cabot—stern, tight-fisted old New Englander. In "Kongo" he had the "toughest" role of all—pure brute. In "The Barker" he stayed "tough." He was Nifty Miller, the barker. For a change he portrayed Ponce De Leon in Eugene O'Neill's "The Fountain."

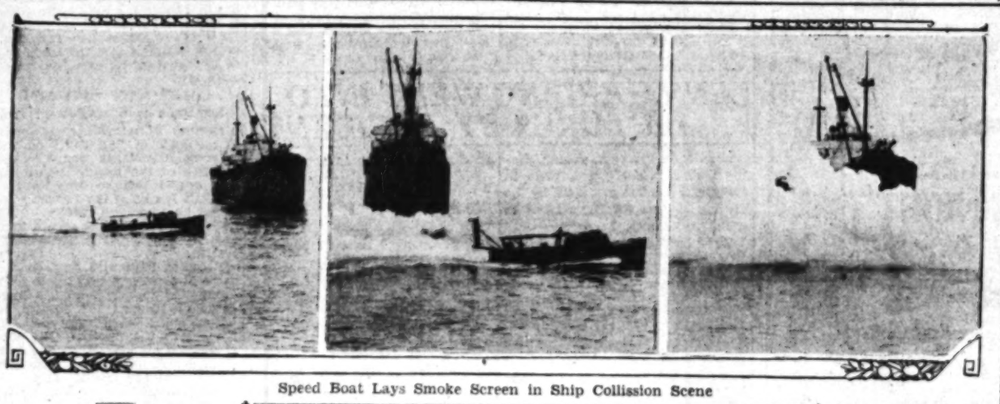
PARAMOUNT WANTED HIM

For a greater change he went into "Elmer the Great" as a baseball player with a swelled head; then back to New England but lightly, in "The Commodore Marries." And Paramount sent for him.

On the screen he continued his "untyped" march forward. He played a newspaper editor in "Gentlemen of the Press," dangerous Trampas in "The Virginian," a flesh-and-blood Lincoln in "Lincoln" and "The Bad Man." In "The General," still unreleased, he goes Russian, and in "The Honor of the Family," still unmade, French revolutionary.

It is only a beginning. The man who a few years ago was a song-and-comedy act in vaudeville will make two pictures a year for the next three years for United Artists and as many for First National.

SEA PICTURE FILMED BEHIND ARTIFICIAL FOG



Speed Boat Lays Smoke Screen in Ship Collission Scene

A ten-mile smoke screen was laid at sea for one sequence in George Bancroft's new starring picture for Paramount, "Typhoon Bill," to meet a major story point that required a dense fog in which two ships collide.

Obviously it would have been impractical, if not impossible for the motion-picture company to put to sea in search of the fog required. Nothing remained but to create one.

The standard chemical smoke screen formula was obtained from the United States Navy Department, a large speed boat was equipped by Paramount technicians with the gas drums and paraphernalia and a fog, perfectly natural and with the double advantage that it could be controlled, was there at the command of Director Rowland V. Lee.

The fog was laid some thirty miles at sea off the coast of Southern California, out of the usual shipping lanes, to prevent possible accident. The scene was one of the most intricate ever attempted for a motion picture.

'RAFFLES' TO BE SEEN AT PANTAGES

Adventures of Society Cracksman to be Shown on Film

Frances Dade and Bramwell Fletcher, both new to pictures, make their first bow in "Raffles," Ronald Colman's latest production at Pantages Hollywood Theater. Her success in the Colman picture has already brought Miss Dade a part in "He Knew Women" with Lowell Sherman.

In "Raffles," Colman has Kay Francis for his leading lady and is supported by a carefully selected cast including David Torrence, Alison Skipworth and Frederick Kerr.

The story of Raffles's adventures, told and retold for the last twenty-five years on the stage, as well as in fiction and on the screen, has become so well known that it has made the name of the hero a word in our everyday language. Samuel Goldwyn assigned Sidney Howard to the task of modernizing these legends.

Tom Waring, lately seen here in "Rah, Rah Daze," is appearing in a special song presentation this week at Pantages.

Pansbon and Marco's miniature musical extravaganza, "Southern Idea," is the current stage presentation, and Slim Martin with the augmented orchestra provides the musical portion of the bill.

FORCASI HAS EXPERIENCE

Paul Forcasi, Italian-American actor, is listed in certain casting offices as "the George Beban of the talkies," because of Forcasi's ability to do the sort of heart-interest portrayals that brought the late Beban such wide popularity. Forcasi has had many years of American stage experience.

Thousands of Extras Will Work in Film

Howard Estabrook, who prepared the screen version and dialogue for "Cimarron," the Edna Ferber story, calls attention to the immensity of the cast, numbering thousands of extras, which will be employed in making the picture. The sets to be used are among the largest and most substantial ever constructed for a picture, yet very little stress is placed upon these features in publicizing the production.

"The fact is," says Estabrook, "mere immensity is no longer the measure by which the public gauges the value of motion pictures. There was a time when items about the outlays of money devoted to a film so staggered the mind that the public concluded such an undertaking must be worth while. Today the fan is looking for new values, and these are not necessarily provided by gigantic specifications."

FAMILY SKELETON EXPOSED

Kenneth MacKenna Resuscitates Long-Dead Actorial Ghost and Carries on in Films

BY ELENA BOLAND

Another young man to go back on his ancestors is Kenneth (Wild) MacKenna. The ancestors, so it seems, were all thoroughly ministerial, of New England and had only horrors about the theater.

But something went amiss with Kenneth's inheritance. He broke loose from a comfortable Wall street position and went on the stage. And it was only after he had made good that one of his aunts took him aside and bared the family shameful skeleton. There had, it seems, been another "wild one," Charlotte Cushman, a great-aunt, and one of the first American actresses to play on the English stage.

But the trouble with himself, deplores Mr. MacKenna, is that he is not what he appears to be. He looks what he ought to be, but isn't. For the past year and a half he has been cast on the screen in what he calls "those clean-limbed young American roles." And each time he must set a new and higher standard for the model business man. MacKenna's manhood cries out for just one act, even one would be something, of villainy.

JUST SANTA CLAUS

"Nice people are so uninteresting; nice young men especially. I call myself a character actor, just as a sort of compensation to my self-esteem for having to play so many of them. Even in 'Man Trouble,' at Loew's this week, I start out as a newspaper columnist — now there ought to be leeway there; but no, before I'm through I'm practically playing Santa Claus, all over an old-fashioned Christmas dinner. I may be suspected of evil, but it is always the other man's error. It all becomes very monotonous."

Besides his dislike in posing as a model for manly relations, the cheerful Kenneth MacKenna announces that he doesn't find acting all it is supposed to be, either. He would much rather direct and produce: direct because a director has more to do—and more to say—than an actor; and produce because a producer is a law unto himself. In other words, MacKenna likes to be head man or nothing.

In New York he directed and produced. Some of his ventures were for the Theater Guild, "Windows," "Forever After" and "What Every Woman Knows." Another of his own productions was "The Big Pond," in which he also played the lead for two years. Maurice Chevalier, it will be remembered, did the picture version.

COMEDY IN HOLLYWOOD

For the screen MacKenna prefers light and frothy comedy. But in the theater his tastes are apt to run to the finer things. Indeed, he lets it be known that his belief in the future of the theater is stronger than ever.

"One thing which talkies have done for the stage—they have eliminated the second-rate theater. Those productions which were put on only well enough to 'get by' have lost out. People can go to a movie and see a much better show for half the price. But the good play is finer now than it has been since the war. It was during the war that the stage began to deteriorate, for any play then went over big. Actors' salaries were increased until they later became ridiculous and at the same time the play's value diminished. But now standards are settling into their old grooves and talkies have hastened the change."

In his Wall street days, the days when he wore a black derby and black tie and was considered "a catch" by enterprising mothers, Kenneth MacKenna became conscientious. And now he must work or he isn't happy. He has plenty to do right now, for he has just been cast in "Sin Takes a Holiday," in which Pathe stars Constance Bennett. It is a little early yet to tell, but MacKenna thinks—and hopes more—that here at last is his "big chance" for some mild villainy.

Hardy Active in Numerous Organizations

The old legend of the "joiner" is put to shame by Sam Hardy, currently playing a principal role in Tiffany's "Borrowed Wives," playing at the Tower Theater.

Hardy not only "joins," but in many cases runs organizations. He finds time somehow outside his work —and his work keeps him busy —to be president of the Masquers, a unique Hollywood organization of celebrated actors similar to the Lambs of New York; chairman of the actors' adjustment committee which settles disputes between producers and players through the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences; president of the Actors' Political League; chairman of the entertainment committee of the Santa Monica Swimming Club, and a very active member of the Troupers' Club.

Rex Lease, Vera Reynolds, Hardy, Charles Sellon, Nita Martan, Harry Todd, Paul Hurst and others have the principal roles in "Borrowed Wives."

Heroes and heroines of the air are much in the public eye these days, and the newest of these to attain international honors are Baron Von Gronau and his gallant crew, who received a typical New York welcome upon the conclusion of their 4670-mile hop from Germany. They are shown being welcomed by Mayor Walker upon the screen of the Newsreel Theater, starting today.

Gladys O'Donnell of Long Beach also comes in for a large share of public esteem in the winning of the women's air derby. On the same program this fair miss tells her many local friends how she did it.

Other timely events are also listed, including travel and short humorous features.

Versatility of Holt Seen in 'The Squealer'

Jack Holt has been a star on the screen for a number of years, but almost always in big he-man roles of the great outdoors. Some of these were military, but most of them were westerns—and all of them were 100 per cent "noble." Holt, anxious to demonstrate his versatility, finds an opportunity in "The Squealer," Columbia's melodrama which is now being shown at the R. K. O. Theater.

For the first time Jack Holt is seen in a well-cut suit—and even in several scenes in a tailored dinner coat. He plays the chief of a gang of bootleg racketeers. In "The Squealer" when Holt takes somebody "for a ride," it is the gangster's journey and not the hope of the pinto through the sagebrush.

Thus Holt is seen not only in different clothes, but in a really different role.

Holt's supporting cast includes Dorothy Revier, Davey Lee, Matt Moore, Zasu Pitts, Robert Ellis and Mathew Betz. The picture was produced by Harry Cohn and directed by Harry Joe Brown.

The vaudeville show at the R.-K.-O. this week is headed by Charles Withers with the latest version of his comedy, "Withers's Opry," long a well-known headliner on the two-a-day of former years. Withers continues to amuse Americs with annual editions of bucolic burlesques. Other acts on the bill include "Scooter" Lowry, the famous tough member of the original "Our Gang" of screen fame; Harrison, Swan and Lucille in "Some Different Dances," and Margaret La Marr and Helen Boice, singing "hostesses."

'Manslaughter' Star's Career Quite Varied

Life has been one surprise after another for pretty Claudette Colbert, star of "Manslaughter," which is the current attraction at the Million Dollar Theater.

One day she found herself trying for a part in a high-school play; she got the part. She was selected for the lead in an amateur production presented at the Provincetown Playhouse. She surprised herself by suggesting to Anne Morrison, the playwright, that she be given a part in Miss Morrison's new production, "The Wild Westcotts." She was surprised to like talking pictures, and to find herself in Hollywood, for she had never intended to leave New York, unless it was to return to London or Paris.

Now, with Fredric March as leading man, Miss Colbert is seen as Alice Duer Miller's heroine in the melodrama, "Manslaughter."

WAR FILM AUTHOR PLEASED

Creator of "All Quiet on Western Front" Sees Universal's Reproduction of His Book

"It is beautiful. I can say no more!" Tears prevented any further expression as Erich Maria Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front," the current Criterion attraction, viewed Universal's picturization of his memorable book, in a neighborhood theater at Munster, in Westphalia, two weeks ago.

The author's reaction to the picturization of his book reached Carl Laemmle, Jr., at Universal City last week, with a comment by James V. Bryson, who flew with a print of the war epic from London to Munster to show Remarque his adventures come to life.

After the showing Remarque told Bryson that "All Quiet on the Western Front" was the true story of his experience in the war and after it. The one change in the facts Remarque made in his novel was that when Remarque (who calls himself Paul Baumer in the novel) returned home on his ten days' leave of absence from the front, actually he found his mother dead. In the film play Baumer finds his mother ill.

Remarque told Bryson that he had gone to war from the classroom fired with patriotic fervor at 18. He was severely wounded in the side during his second year at the front. His inspiration to write so feelingly of youth's experience in the face of war came as his mother was laid to rest and, his leave at an end, he had to return to the front.

The young German writer is now working on a new story tentatively called "Kamerad," and this is to be delivered to Universal in October.

"I allowed Paul Baumer to die in 'All Quiet on the Western Front,'" Remarque told Bryson, "because most of my war-time buddies were left on the battlefield. There was as great a story in the peace that followed the great war as in the war itself. Those of my friends who did not die in France will live their experience in the new story. I am writing entirely from personal experiences and observations during the reconstruction period. War does peculiar things to human beings with sensitive natures and ambition and a yearning for romance. I have been honest in 'All Quiet' and I shall be honest in 'Kamerad.'

"If the public shows the same appreciation of my new book as it did the first volume, I will believe there is much to live for. I am grateful for what has happened; for the generosity of people in many lands and to Universal for its consideration of my story."

CONSTANTLY BESIEGED

Remarque is a modest—in fact, somewhat of a melancholy—man. The success of "All Quiet on the Western Front" has won him the plaudits of the world, but it has also caused him considerable discomfort. His home is constantly besieged by autograph seekers. His daily mail has reached such a total that he cannot give it personal attention.

Recently Remarque was on the verge of a nervous breakdown from attempting to accede to the hundreds of requests for autographs, letters, autographed books and dinners. With his manager, Otto Klements and his wife, Remarque went from Berlin to a quiet mountain resort. On the second day his whereabouts became known and the resort became so crowded with tourists that the author engaged an airplane and flew to a private home near the Swiss border. Remarque hinted that he may visit America next winter if he can master the English language sufficiently. However, if he does, it will probably be incognito.

ANN HARDING WENT INTO PICTURES BY ACCIDENT

Man, or in this case, woman, proposes and fate disposes, even in Hollywood—as was evidenced by the signing of Ann Harding's name to a Pathe contract.

Tired from strenuous work on the New York stage over a period of several years, Ann Harding, the Broadway star, came to California for a rest. She even took up her residence in Pasadena, rather than Hollywood or Beverly Hills, to assure herself of the rest which might not come so easily if she lived in the film colony, where many of her former New York friends were making their homes.

One day Miss Harding was invited to lunch at the Pathe studio with Frank Reicher, director of dialogue who was about to begin work on "Paris Bound." Reicher had been a stage actor and director when the blond Ann began her career on Broadway, and a warm friendship had continued between the two since their meeting in those days.

After luncheon, however, Reicher proposed a screen test.

"I want you to see how you look and sound," he told Ann.

"It would be a lark," the actress admitted, "but I have no intention of doing picture work."

"Let's make it, anyway," urged Reicher.

The test was made, and Miss Harding proved to be an ideal photographic subject. Her voice, too, reproduced beautifully.

Before she left Reicher put in her hand a copy of the script which had been written for "Paris Bound."

"As a favor to me, please read the story," he said.

The rest is screen history. Now Miss Harding is the star of "Holiday," current at the Carthay Circle Theater, and her performance has been hailed by press and public alike as one of the most distinguished yet offered by the adherents of the talking screen.

PALLETTE NO COMIC, HE SAYS

Character Work Comes First, Veteran Tells; if Funny, All Right

BY JOHN SCOTT

Twice a noted name in theatricals and twice at the bottom of the list are experiences in the career of Eugene Pallette, jovial and versatile character actor, who is now working for Paramount. There has also been time to sandwich in jobs as jockey, oil worker, streetcar conductor, army aviator and sundry other positions of high and low degree.

Now the actor has visions again of reaching the top, and there is no doubt that, barring accidents, he will achieve his objective. However, his goal is not stardom. No, indeed, that condition places too much responsibility upon a person, he believes. And, shifting ...aries usually remain about the same, anyway.

Directing, once the forte of the veteran, is the answer. And what better background could a player have than nineteen years in the picture business, first as an extra, then as a handsome leading man, followed by character parts, hundreds of them, ranging from detectives to girdle salesman—Pallette's role in "Follow Thru," showing currently at the United Artists Theater?

"There is a job (directing) that I am going to have again some day," Pallette said. "I've taken the bumps and I know what it is to want and not get. But this time, watch. I write my own parts and now and then make a suggestion during the filming of a picture which is followed, although there are plenty of times when it is not.

"I am not a comedian. There are fifteen or more good comics on the Paramount lot right now, and I have no aspirations to infringe on their territory. If I am playing a character role that carries comedy, well and good. I do it. But here is the difference—I am behind the situation. If it doesn't 'click,' I am way behind it; but if it does, then credit comes my way. I'm not selfish about this, just sensible, or, shall we say, cautious."

Character parts, according to Pallette, require more study than comedy roles. The individuals who score as funny men usually have a distinctive way of getting over their own particular brand of humor. Pallette rates Jack Oakie, his friend, high in this list. Oakie has his own way of handling comedy situations and he doesn't have to vary much from role to role. Pallette says each one of his own characters is a different person and as such must be played differently.

Theatergoers have come to compare Pallette's detectives in the various murder mysteries that Paramount has produced with similar characters in other vehicles of the same type and usually have found the latter wanting. The actor prides himself on these characterizations. He has studied the gum-shoeing gentlemen and their enemies, the crooks, first-hand. Pallette believes he has met practically every notorious crook in the country at some time or other. He has passed up no opportunity to dig underneath their personalities, he says, and to list what he found for future reference — that is, of course, for picture work only.

At the present time Pallette is making his third comeback. His notices over the country seems to indicate that he is making good. His only worry is that roles come so thick and fast that the activity interferes with duck hunting, which is his favorite recreation.

LEILA BENNETT IN "IT'S A WISE CHILD," BELASCO

Belasco Chose Leila Bennett for 'Wise Child'

Ability to take what to another actress would be but a "bit" role and transform it into a characterization good enough to almost "stop the show" is Leila Bennett's triumph in David Belasco's new comedy success, "It's a Wise Child," now at the Belasco Theater.

Selection of Miss Bennett by David Belasco for a role in a Belasco play took place many months before the producer ever heard of "It's a Wise Child." Following his usual custom whenever he hears of an outstanding bit of work by a young performer, Belasco and his secretary visited a performance of "The First Year." In this play Miss Bennett had the role of a totally "dumb" colored maid, and made of it an outstanding bit.

"I'll need her one of these days," Belasco said at the end of the performance, and when he accepted "It's a Wise Child" from Laurence E. Johnson, his first instruction to Burk Symon, his casting director, was: "Get that little girl who played the colored maid in 'The First Year.'"

Johnny Johnson to Make Debut at Roosevelt

Latest of the internationally known orchestras to come to the Blossom Room of the Roosevelt Hotel is Johnny Johnson and his Victor Recording Orchestra, noted for their broadcasts over the Columbia radio network, who will open a special limited engagement in "the playground of the stars" tomorrow night.

They will succeed the popular "Jesting Maestro," Ben Bernie, who completed his engagement last night.

The engagement of Johnson's peppy musical group is in line with the Roosevelt management's policy of presenting in the Blossom Room only world-famous orchestras such as those of Bernie, George Olsen and Irving Aaronson.

Fox Wilshire to Open Soon

"Art is getting on a more solid basis," according to Jack Shulse, art director of the Fox Studios, whose modern design in interior and furnishing of the new Fox Wilshire Theater, Beverly Hills, is said to establish a new note in theater decoration.

It has only been during the last few years that the modern art has come into general use, and the new Fox Wilshire is said to be the first theater designed completely in the modern motif.

The colors used in the interior of the new theater are coral, black and silver which are varied at will by a new three-way color system of lighting.

One of the interesting departures in design in the new theater, which has its premiere the 19th inst., is the curtain. It opens in three or four phases, as an iris, developing various designs in the opening.

Three Pictures at Alhambra

"Caught Short," the comedy drama of the stock-market crash in which Marie Dressler and Polly Moran appear, concludes its run at the Alhambra Theater today.

Tomorrow ushers in the revival of Gloria Swanson's success, "The Trespasser," in which the star regained the popularity of her silent pictures.

"The Cock-Eyed World," co-starring Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe is billed for the final half of the week.

BROADWAY CONVALESCENT

"Torch Song," "Up Pops the Devil" Point to Early Recovery of Theater from Doldrums

BY PERCY HAMMOND

NEW YORK, Sept. 6. (Exclusive)—The theater shows symptoms of convalescence with the appearance of "Torch Song" and "Up Pops the Devil"—plays designed to invigorate its impaired condition. Neither is of the tip-top kind that becomes a natural institution, but both are much above the run of the mine. With so propitious a beginning, the season may be expected to produce an entertainment of the caliber of "Strange Interlude" and "The Green Pastures." At least the more hopeful addicts of the stage scan the skies with optimism and prognosticate that the coming year will be fruitful as usual.

So, unless the omens and the dramatists disappoint us, we shall have a few such angel visits as "Coquette" or "June Moon" or "Rain" or "Strictly Dishonorable" ere winter ends.

HOW THEY SAY IT

Both "Torch Song" and "Up Pops the Devil" depend for their popularity upon the glitter of their lines rather than their plots and characters. In "Torch Song" it is the penetrating lingo of the traveling salesmen that provides most of the recreation. One of these Main-street gypsies is a portly and sententious vendor of undertakers' supplies. A capricious invention of the author, Kenyon Nicholson, this amusing mortician is expertly embalmed by Guy Kibbe in a merry and careful characterization. Even if Prof. Nicholson falters in the technique of his conflict of sex versus religion, you may depend upon him and Mr. Kibbe to make you forget the play's flaws.

It is, as you may know, the story of a Cincinnati roadhouse girl (Miss Mayo Methot,) who, fooled by her lover, a commercial traveler from Cleveland, tries to console herself by joining the Salvation Army. But the beat of her heart's pagan tomtoms is louder than the taps and jingles of her pious tambourine. When they meet again at a hotel in Pomeroy, O., she doffs her white halo and dons the scarlet bandeau of original sin.

"UP POPS THE DEVIL"

It is an age of wisecracking; and so the sagacious authors of "Up Pops the Devil" fatten their lean story with slangy phrases tried and true. We are introduced in this lively comedy to the soarings and depressions of a group of infant Greenwich Villagers, drowning their haughty ambitions in torrents of bathtub gin. As they gather in the antique flat of Steve, a writer, and Anna, a serious dancer, their every speech is an echo of something that Broadway has said before. The play dangles from the precarious situation of Anna, who dances at Roxy's and is keeping Steve while he writes a book. They quarrel dramatically in the second act over a laundry bill; but at the end they are to be seen permanently in paradise in one another's arms.

Roger Pryor, son of the famous bandmaster, Arthur Pryor, plays Steve in the over-ingratiating method of Owen Davis, Jr., and is to be doubted at times. But all the others are little miracles of extravagant impersonations except the lady, who falsifies the role of an ingenue from the South. She is much too phoney for comfort. Even if the comedy were not artificially amusing the lovely performance of Miss Sally Bates as Anne would make it important. A good-looking and thoroughbred girl with an artistic knack of imitating emotions, she is one of the best of the stage's promises.

Kolb and Dill Play Starts Second Week

"Good Old Days," the Aaron Hoffman farce-comedy in which C. William Kolb and Max M. Dill are costarring at the Hollywood Playhouse, starts its second week with tonight's performances. The farce-comedy, which deals with various aspects of the prohibition question, was written especially for the comedians by Aaron Hoffman and it has been one of their popular starring vehicles.

The first act of "Good Old Days" shows an old-time corner saloon owned by Nick Schloss and Albert Wagner. When the prohibition amendment puts the saloon out of business, the partners take opposing sides of the question and go their separate ways. Nick turns into a prohibition agent, while Albert follows the only trade he knows and grows rich as a bootlegger, finally buying Nick's residence.

With Kolb as Nick and Dill as Albert are Marguerite De la Motte in the chief feminine role of Katie, Julia Hanlon in her original role of Pricie, Franklyn Farnum and James Bush. And among the others are Arthur Harris, Henry Shumer, Charles Edler, Ben Taggart, Allyn Lewis and Robert Bowen.

'Romance' Has Second Runs About Town

It is seldom that a picture plays a return engagement in a theater where it has been shown only two weeks previously. However, "Romance," in which Clarence Brown directed Greta Garbo, has been enjoying repeat engagements in several of the neighborhood houses in and about Los Angeles during the past week.

This, with the country-wide acclaim of "Romance," certifies that the Clarence Brown-Greta Garbo combination has promoted another record-breaking success. The reviews from all parts of the country hail Brown's direction as another artistic achievement and Garbo as the glamorous, effective actress she was in her silent pictures, and "Anna Christie" her first talkie.

Brown is now preparing his next production, which will have Lawrence Tibbett as star. He is in constant conference with Bess Meredyth and Wells Root, who are rapidly completing writing the dialogue for the story they originated themselves.

MME. GOTHOLT CHOSEN

Mme. Nelle Gotholt, famous prima donna, was chosen by California Women of the Golden West to sing "California Golden Land of Destiny," the club's official song, at the fiesta-ball and carnival fete of progress in honor of the one hundred and forty-ninth birthday anniversary of the city of Los Angeles.

Screen Players Must be Kept Right on Job

The screen actor is the exception among all other artists in that once he has executed his performance, the result must stand or fall. The stage actor has tomorrow night, an ever-recurring opportunity to improve his performance, asserts Jean Hersholt, who has been both.

This handicap of the player in motion pictures has both advantages and disadvantages, Hersholt points out. It rids him of the tendency to be careless. But it often deprives him of the chance to do his very best work for the public, and this is a disadvantage.

"I daresay there are few players who cannot see where any given performance could be improved upon.

"But when the scene is shot, although it may be acceptable to the director, the film actor is often dissatisfied with his work. He afterward realizes possibilities that he did not at first perceive, and becomes aware of opportunities that he did not take full advantage of. I think this handicap is making the screen actor more conscientious in study and more intense at rehearsal," concluded Hersholt, who recently completed the featured character role in "East is West" and "The Cat Creeps," both Universal productions. At present he is executing a role in "The Third Alarm," a Tiffany production.

Directors Give More Rein to Players Today

Giving the actor his due is one of the precepts by which Leo McCarey directs pictures. This is something of a revolution from the methods to which directors were obliged to resort in the days of voiceless films, he points out.

Direction in the days of silent pictures, before the best actors of the theater were brought to Hollywood, often meant struggle in order to obtain the effect desired. Often the director would have to "walk through" the scene, doing the acting himself in order that the actor could see how it should be done. This, according to McCarey, who is preparing to direct "Shopper Newfounder," a Fox production, was inclined to overemphasize the importance of the director.

With the advent of so many stage-trained people, the wise director is giving freer rein to the players under him, realizing their capabilities and wishing to give them every opportunity for original work.

Doris Lloyd Plays Role in "Old English"

Doris Lloyd plays one of the leading feminine roles in "Old English," starring George Arliss. Miss Lloyd is always one of the first actresses demanded for an English production. But she is seriously planning to have some records made that show that she can simulate any voice or accent. Because of her pronounced success in English parts, she sometimes has her troubles when it comes to certain American roles.

"Voice, intonation, accent, vocal color are the essence of the particular role one is playing," she says. "If one has the psychology of a part perfectly, the voice must fit that part. A well-schooled actor is so educated that he has no difficulty in imitating anything."

Doris Lloyd recently finished an engagement on the local stage in "The Champion" playing opposite Grant Mitchell. She is now returning to the screen in "Charlie's Aunt" for the Christies.

PATSY MILLER IN 'COQUETTE'

Following a success in "Rebound" at Oakland, Patsy Ruth Miller remained in the former city for a week as star in "Coquette," the rights to which were acquired by George Eby for the motion-picture luminary's second stage vehicle.

'POOR NUT' CHEER LEADER FINDS FORMER MANAGER

Percy Helton, playing the irrepressible "Magpie" Welch, the cavorting cheer leader in "The Poor Nut," has a double "tie-up" with El Capitan Theater, where the college comedy is now in its second week.

In addition to being one of the members of the original New York cast of "The Poor Nut," most of which supports Elliott Nugent in the Hollywood production, Helton also recalls a one-time association with Matthew Allen, manager of El Capitan.

Allen first "managed" Percy Helton in the Astor Theater, New York, in 1915, when he was playing the role of the lame boy in George M. Cohan's production of "The Miracle Man," the part which sky-rocketed him to success. It was also in this company that Allen first met Frank Bacon, who was playing the role of the hotel keeper. This was three years before Bacon's sensational success in "Lightnin'." The meeting was destined to play an important part in the manager's life as it brought about his introduction to Bessie Bacon, daughter of the beloved actor, whom he later married.

Now Helton comes again under the managerial hand of Allen in his first appearance on the Pacific Coast since 1912, when he played with David Warfield in "The Return of Peter Grimm" at the Mason Theater.

Outstanding among Mr. Helton's Broadway successes are "Young America," "Fifty Miles from Boston," "Bunk," Brown," "Shavings," "The Five Million," "Up the Ladder," "To the Ladies," "Happy," a musical comedy, and "Remote Control."

When he received Allen's wire asking him to come to Hollywood to play his original role in "The Poor Nut," he was just finishing an engagement in "Who Cares," in which he was featured comedian. The play closed just in time for him to grab his bag, hop a train and get to Hollywood in time to brush up on his part of "Magpie" Welch, which he played for ninety-seven consecutive weeks in the East.

RICH GOWNS SEEN IN FILM

Louise Boulanger of Paris is credited with bringing about the quick change in feminine styles that swept the lengthened skirt into almost universal favor.

The fashion show in "On Your Back," current screen attraction at the Boulevard, was planned not only to be an authentic interpretation of the current mode, but to anticipate the fashions of one year hence. This necessitated a careful check on all New York and Parisian couturiers, as a result of which the gowns displayed in the picture constitute the very last word as dictated by Sophie Waehner, one of the screen's foremost stylists.

IRENE RICH

Irene Rich, as the fashionable modiste in the picture, wears ten gowns which reflect the artistry of foremost designers. Marion Shilling, the ingenue, wears almost an equal number, while the fashion show features a parade of fifteen mannequins, displaying the latest in feminine wear.

The story of "On Your Back" is from a recent magazine story by Rita Weiman, adapted for the audible screen by Howard J. Green.

Others in the featured cast include H. B. Warner, Raymond Hackett and Ilka Chase. Guthrie McClintic, producer of the stage successes, "The Green Hat," "The Shanghai Gesture" and "Dishonored Lady," directed.

GROUCHO MARX POOR STOCK MARKET GUESSER

Groucho Marx, starring with his three brothers in "Animal Crackers," held over for a second week at the Paramount Theater, admitted recently that his irascible disposition is caused by his inability to become a successful guesser about the stock market.

"That's why we're still on the stage," he grumbled. "If I were a better guesser we'd all have villas on the Riviera. As it is, we get a little ahead, and then, poof, it's gone."

The other three brothers have little fellow feeling for Groucho's financial ambitions and protest vigorously when, in a moment of freedom from motion-picture or stage work he heads Wall-streetward.

In spite of Groucho's foreboding mien, the Marx brothers are by no means on the verge of penury, judging from the receipts they are reported to have piled up over the entire country. "The Cocoanuts" was an outstanding success both on stage and screen. "Animal Crackers" played to capacity houses on the stage, and the audible screen version, now at the Paramount Theater, promises to be equally well received and profitable.

CLIFT WILL BE HONORED

Denison Clift, Paramount playwright and director, will be an honored guest at the premieres of two of his dramatic works this fall. First he will attend the opening of Fox's picturization of his Broadway play, "Scotland Yard," which was recently filmed with Edmund Lowe and Joan Bennett in the principal roles. Later in the season he will journey to London to be present at the "first night" of his latest play, "Sin Becomes Fashionable," a story of sophisticates which is being produced first in England.

OPERA READERS INCREASE

Southern California Now Has 200 Clubs Devoted to Interpretation of Masterpieces

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

Among the 200 music clubs now flourishing in Southern California the pioneers and the inspiration for many subsequent organizations are the opera-reading clubs.

Of course, opera and explanatory lectures have always existed in combination wherever astute managers administer music affairs. But the taking idea of lecturing to a large group and using a quartet, sextet or octet of singers for parts of prominence was first developed in Hollywood by Dr. Frank Nagel.

READINGS IN STUDIO

The idea grew from an opera-reading class inaugurated by Dr. Nagel about five years ago. The readings took place in his studio before a few interested opera lovers and students of voice and Dr. Nagel talked while seated at the piano illustrating themes.

These classes interested so many people that an eastern visitor proposed to organize a Hollywood opera-reading club. The first meeting was held in the Masonic lodge rooms of Hollywood. Now the meetings are held in one of the largest theaters in Hollywood Monday mornings during the winter season.

Later the Los Angeles Euterpe Opera Reading Club was formed and directed first by Alexander Bevani and later by Roland Paul. After Dr. Nagel became ill his son, Conrad Nagel, took up the Hollywood club and two years ago Leon Rains assumed direction of this and the sister club at Long Beach, which was also formed by Dr. Nagel. The same programs with the same singers and director are given at Long Beach as are given in Hollywood.

OTHERS INTERESTED

Now the foothill cities have organized an opera-reading club meeting in the Fox Theater at Monrovia and the idea has spread all over the United States from the nucleus of our four. Clubs flourish in Buffalo, Detroit, Cincinnati and Boston.

Reading operas in preparation for the season has always been a part of our music life since Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley was brought here for the purpose by L. E. Behymer thirty-five years ago.

The occasion, according to "Bee," was the first presentation of "Parsifal." The lectures were so popular, illustrated as they were by lantern slides and music, that Mr. Behymer alternated them with Burton Holmes's lectures on travel and later with Dr. Baumgardt's astronomical lectures. The opera lectures, were, of course, to stimulate interest in this art, which can only be fostered through knowledge.

Opera-reading club members have the habit of studying libretti and scores before attending an opera. Most opera-goers wait until the rush hour of getting into the auditorium before even buying a libretto. Then they wildly scramble for the story in the few minutes of light remaining before the curtain goes up and therefore miss the overture. The overture is invariably an important part of the opera.

WHERE OBTAINABLE

The libretti are obtainable when opera tickets are bought and at the same place. Or the music stores carry them and are also glad to play the phonograph records if anyone cares to hear them.

In Santa Barbara opera is played every Saturday night by the phonograph dealers. The attendance by the Mexican music lovers is very large and so many opera records are purchased that dealers consider Saturday nights very profitable.

VIOLINIST HOME FROM EUROPE

Josef Borissoff

Josef Borissoff, violinist and teacher, will return to Los Angeles about the 20th inst. after a three months' tour of Europe.

He has a moving-picture film of his late teacher, Leopold Auer, during their visit in New York, which he has brought to Los Angeles. Mr. Borissoff has been in Los Angeles three years.

Olga Steeb to Join Cumnock School Faculty

Piano instruction at the newly reorganized Cumnock schools, will be in charge of Olga Steeb, Los Angeles pianist, it was announced yesterday by A. A. Macurda and M. C. Drisko, new directors of the institution.

In addition to her many appearances here, including performances in the Hollywood Bowl, Miss Steeb has given concerts in almost all of the leading cities in America.

Music and art courses are to be stressed strongly, in addition to the usual curriculum at the Cumnock School, the directors said yesterday, when the institution opens its doors for classes the 16th inst. Miss Steeb will offer courses for all divisions of the school, which is now co-educational, from the kindergarten through the junior college.

Other well-known musicians, who have joined the faculty at Cumnock, are Henry Brenner, former concert master of the Berlin opera, who will teach violin; Hal Davidson Crain and Aimee Spurr, vocalists.

CADMAN TO RETREAT

Charles Wakefield Cadman will retreat for the winter to his ranch home, coming out occasionally to see his friends in Los Angeles.

Program Given at Eagle Rock

At the final concert of a successful summer series, given under the auspices of the Eagle Rock Chamber of Commerce and Occidental College, Chief Yowlache and the Nielsen Trio presented a program before an enthusiastic audience of nearly 1000 in the Occidental Greek Bowl. These Friday evening concerts have been so popular this summer that they will be continued next season.

POULIN TO CONTINUE WITH CLUB

Re-engagement of Music Leader of Twenty-seven Years' Standing Made

Prof. J. B. Poulin has been re-engaged as music director of the Ellis Club. Prof. Poulin has been directing this musical organization for twenty-seven years. Mrs. M. Hennion-Robbison has also been re-engaged as the club's accompanist, which position she has held with much credit for ten years.

Rehearsals by active members of the Ellis Club have just commenced, thus marking the forty-third year of its existence. This singing society is composed of trained men singers, and an invitation is extended to worthy male vocalists to become members, especially those with first tenor and second bass voices. Application should be made to the musical director, Music-Arts Building, or to the secretary, Capt. Herbert D. Alphonso, 317 North Avenue 55, Los Angeles.

The annual meeting of the club was recently held at the ranch of Oscar W. Leonard, situated in the Malibu Mountains. This outing also was the occasion of the club's annual picnic and high jinks, which lasted two days. About sixty active members of the club were in attendance.

Students will Specialize in Light Opera

Specializing in the field of light opera and musical comedy, Beatrice McKenzie is training many students for talking-picture work at the McKenzie School of Light Opera and Musical Comedy here.

Miss McKenzie is of the opinion that unless a student possesses the kind of voice and other qualifications necessary to grand opera performance, he should never attempt to sing such roles. "Many beautiful voices which are primarily fitted for light opera singing may be ruined by attempting grand opera," she says, "and there are many light operas, such as 'The Bohemian Girl' and 'Fra Diavolo,' which require a high order of musicianship for proper presentation."

Miss McKenzie has traveled extensively throughout the United States and Europe, as prima donna and prima donna soubrette in various light opera companies, and has also sung the leading role in "Carmen" and other grand operas. Upon coming to Los Angeles six years ago, she established the McKenzie School of Light Opera and Musical Comedy and has devoted her attention to teaching since that time.

'Tiefland' to be Given Here in January

Eugene D'Albert's opera, "Tiefland," will be included in the repertoire of the German Grand Opera Company in its third American tour starting in January, according to the announcement of J. J. Vincent, managing director.

M. D'Albert will be remembered by American audiences as a pianist of exceptional ability who toured this country seasons ago.

"Tiefland" has been produced at the Metropolitan Opera House. The German Grand Opera Company has engaged especially for the role of Sebastiano one of the greatest exponents of this role in Europe, Max Roth, foremost baritone of the famous Berlin Staatsoper. The role of Nuri will be sung by Mme. Karie Von Kuilberg, wife of the Swedish Consul in Stettin, Germany, who has also attained a reputation in Europe for this part. It is expected that Dr. Max Von Schillings, former director of the Staatsoper in Berlin, will conduct the D'Albert opera.

Music College Registration to be Opened

The College of Music, University of Southern California, will open next Thursday, for private instruction in all branches of applied music and on the 15th inst. for class periods. Registration days for the new semester begin tomorrow and continue for one week.

Miss Pauline Alderman has been added to the faculty this year, coming from the University of Washington to take the position of assistant professor of harmony, ear training, and dictation. She is a graduate of Reed College and has had private piano work with Alf Klingenberg and Abby Whiteside and private harmony work with Carolyn A. Alchin.

Gertrude Ross Writes Setting for "Prunella"

Gertrude Ross, Southern California's composer, has written the musical setting for "Prunella" which has been successfully produced at Laguna Beach several times this summer. It was given three consecutive Friday and Saturday nights and an extra performance on Sunday evening.

Franklin Record, tenor, sang the two serenades in the setting and Mrs. La Rue Mayer sang a new song especially written for this production.

YOUNG COMPOSER SUCCEEDS

Work to be Published by Society

Ulric Cole, Los Angeles Composer of Attainment.

ULRIC COLE is a young composer whom Los Angeles is proud to claim. She is now living in New Haven and working under the shadow of Yale and the Juilliard Foundation, of New York, which institution discovered her ability a few years ago and invited her to study with Goldmark.

Coming back to visit her parents this summer, Miss Cole brought with her a sheaf of completed compositions in the form of two violin and piano sonatas, a prelude and fuque for two pianos and a concerto for piano and orchestra. These will be published by the Society for the Publication of American Music.

Ulric Cole has accomplished a fine start very quietly. Her writings are well formed and original. They are modern in setting, but have also the grace of poetry and beauty of line.

Later she continued composition with Rubin Goldmark and piano with Lhevinne. Two years in Paris where she studied several months with Nadia Boulanger, and a trip to Spain where the Arabic influence of the peasants' music made a deep impression, broadened her education.

Miss Cole's father is a well-known violoncellist and she has written a "Lamento" for 'cello which Cornelius Van Vliet has performed in New York. Hans Letz has given two performances of her first violin sonata in New York and Sylvain Noack has played it in Los Angeles.

This very interesting young person with a future, has had the good fortune to study foundations and musical structure in her early work and now that she is mentally mature her inspiration is not limited by lack of discipline and knowledge. She can be original and effective at once.

ARTISTS TAKE HOLIDAYS

Many Musicians and Singers Enjoy Vacations in California as Well as in Europe

Usually the well-known artists, vocalists, instrumentalists, dancers and ensembles, take their summer vacations either at their own homes or ramble through well-known sections of Europe or America for a change of environment and, if possible, get as far away from their line of business as it is possible so to do.

Claire Dux, lyric soprano, is now at one of the leading lake resorts regaining her strength after an operation and preparing her new programs. Although no; advising such severe methods, she reports that she is entirely rested, a few pounds lighter and with more vigor and vim than she has enjoyed for the last ten years.

Sergi Rachmaninoff, the pianist, with his family, has been traveling among the lakes in Maine and the haunts of Newfoundland, fishing, canoeing and communing with nature.

Ignace Paderewski, pianist, has spent about three weeks in Morges on the shore of Lake Geneva, but was called to Paris and London for a few recitals before sailing to America for the most closely booked tour that he has ever enjoyed. He is accompanied by Mme. Paderewski.

Mischa Elman, violinist, with his family, has spent the last three months in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Yosemite Park, the lake regions of California, the upper Sierras, and is now en route to Europe for an early season in the leading musical centers before returning to America for his annual tour.

Paul Robeson, the Negro vocalist, has been appearing, the greatest dramatic success in his life as "Othello," at the Savoy Theater in London, playing opposite Louise Thorndyke as Desdemona and Morris Brown as Iago. He is now returning to America after a season of rest in Scotland for his closely booked tour, reaching Los Angeles early in March.

Harold Bauer, pianist, selected for his summer vacation the haunts of his boyhood in and about London, the English and Scottish lake section and the highlands of Scotland, appearing later in the leading cities of England before returning to America.

"DARK STAR" ROLE

Russell Hopton, who is enacting a featured role in "Dark Star" opposite Dorothy Jordan for M.-G.-M., recently portrayed her brother in "The Singer of Seville," also for M.-G.-M.

Composer and Teacher Begins Fall Courses

Kurt Mueller, pianist, composer and teacher, has again resumed his fall teaching after a well-earned rest; many pupils have already enlisted into his class of composition and counterpoint.

Mr. Mueller enjoys the reputation of having produced many well schooled players. One of these is Hannah Spiro, concert pianist, who has just returned from Europe after an extensive concert tour in Berlin, Breslau, Paris, London and other cities of Europe. She is at present in America.

Another pupil of Mr. Mueller's is Mme. Siegfried Wagner who studied repertoire with this pianist in Berlin.

Orchestra to Give Concert in Glendale

In preparation for the first concert of what promises to be its most ambitious season, the Glendale Symphony Orchestra has been rehearsing for more than a month under the direction of its conductor, Modest Altschuler.

Mr. Altschuler reports that a large number of young players have joined the orchestra, and that the semiweekly rehearsals have been attended by an average of fifty or more members. There is still room, he says, for a few amateurs in the heavy string and wind sections.

There are no dues nor fees in connection with membership in the orchestra, which meets at 7:45 p.m. Monday and Wednesday evenings at the Roosevelt school, Glendale avenue at Chevy Chase.

The opening program will be given at the Herbert Hoover auditorium, Glendale, Monday night, October 20.

SCHOOL TO GIVE NIGHT INSTRUCTION

Zoellner Conservatory will Hold Classes for Busy People

Many new students are registering at the Zoellner Conservatory of Music, being attracted by the courses offered by its faculty. A curriculum perfected from year to year has given the conservatory a national standing and has been the means of drawing students to this school from many States.

To meet the requirements of a well-rounded musical education, a modern language department has been added. The languages taught are Italian, German and French, the instructors being Mme. Juliette Orebin, formerly professor at the University of Melbourne, Australia, and Mme. M. B. Weil, graduate of the Sophie Germain School, Paris, France, and the University of California.

To accommodate adult students who have only evenings to study, the Zoellner Conservatory will offer complete night courses of instruction in all branches.

Organ will be Dedicated with Recital

This afternoon at 4 o'clock the new four-manual eighty-stop Skinner organ just installed in the auditorium of Josiah Royce Hall, gift of a generous friend who prefers to have his name withheld, will be dedicated with a recital by Harold Gleason, head of the organ department of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y. There are several points of local interest about the occasion. Mr. Gleason grew up in Los Angeles, receiving his earlier training with Ernest Douglas and Homer Grunn. He also was organist of the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles, and of other local churches.

Ernest Douglas has composed a sketch for organ expressly for performance at this recital. Again, in memory of his father, Josiah Royce, the famous philosopher and son of California, for whom the university auditorium building is named, Mr. Edward Royce, a member of the faculty of the Eastman school, has composed for the occasion a series of variations as a theme.

Pipe Organ to be Taught by Light Method

Perfection of a method of visual instruction, which will be made available to musical educators for the first time through automatic pipe organs now being built for New York public schools, has been announced today at the Estey organ works, where seven of the instruments are under construction.

Flashing lights in colors sympathetic with the feeling of the composition being played will indicate, not only to individuals at the keydesk, but to entire classrooms, the operation of the stops or controls as called for in the automatic playing of the composition. As the pipe organ, a combination of all instruments, is recognized as the best common vehicle for all instrumental instruction the new development may be said to apply the fullest advantages of visual education to virtually the entire field of music. This field includes particularly musical appreciation classes as well as musical analysis and theory and composition, in which the pipe organ has long been an outstanding factor.

QUEBEC TO HOLD FESTIVAL

French-Canadian Season of Folk Song will be Held in Old City During Month of October

The Quebec Festival of French-Canadian Folk Songs and crafts at which artists born and bred on the soil of Quebec and celebrated artists from far and wide rival one another in the spirit of old France and old New France and the ever-old Gallic race, will be held this year on October 16, 17 and 18, according to an announcement made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, organizers of the festival.

The center of activity during the three days of the festival will be the Chateau Frontenac, where at the two preceding festivals hundreds of visitors from all parts of Canada, France, Great Britain and the United States, will gather for a feast of ballad operas, folk dances, French and French-Canadian music, songs of the sea, of the village, farm and river men, of the logging, haunting "chansons" of the "voyageurs" and courseurs de bois, and of the pioneer woodsmen of the province. In addition, there will be exhibitions of every handicraft practiced in old rural France and in the province of Quebec.

The two ballad operas selected for presentation at the festival represent in the one the joyous scene of French-Canadian life, and the other a page from the history of early French settlements in Acadia. The first, "A French-Canadian Wedding," was written by Alberic Bourgeois, and depicts the jollity of a rural wedding accompanying a country marriage of this nature 100 years ago.

"L'Ordre de Bon Temps," the second opera, was written by Marc Lescarbot and Marc Antoine de Montigny. It scored a remarkable success on its first production that it was translated into English and produced at Halifax, Nova Scotia, Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Victoria, in the order named. "The Order of Good Cheer" is derived from the diary of Marc Lescarbot and paints a brilliant picture of life in the settlement of Port Royal under Champlain, three centuries ago. A revised French version of the French-Canadian operetta, "La Chasse-Galerie," by Claude Chouquette, will be presented at the coming festival by a company from "La Societe des Artistes" of Montreal, under the direction of Mme. H. Vaillancourt. The music has been arranged by Dr. Healey Willan of the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

VOICE TEACHER HAS NEW STUDIO

Mabel Hayes

Mayel Hayes, Los Angeles teacher of singing, seems to be enjoying the same success in her Los Angeles studios that she formerly had when she was located for eight years in New York City. She has found it necessary to move to more spacious quarters, at North Western avenue.

Paramount has also been apprised of Miss Hayes's successful teaching ability through several members of the motion picture industry who are now her students, and has sent her two of its featured players for a complete vocal training. They are Frances Dee, leading lady, who has just finished the feminine lead opposite Maurice Chevalier in the musical comedy motion picture production entitled "The Little Cafe," and Marion Shilling.

DOESN'T SING OR DANCE

Although Vera Marsh, who essays the feminine lead in "Meet the Widow," is a musical comedy actress, her role in this Pathe college comedy does not call for any singing or dancing.

CLASSICAL DANCE STILL HOLDS OWN

Productions Turning from Jazz to Older Forms, Says Ernest Belcher

"They've been talking a long time about the ballet dancing returning unto its own; but really, it's never gone anywhere to make it necessary to supply it with a return ticket."

Ernest Belcher declared yesterday in discussing the sudden trend of motion-picture magnates in turning to a more classical form of musical production for the screen. "The producers believed the people wanted nothing but jazz and eccentricity," continued Belcher, "but they've found out differently."

"Scores of musical productions that were out of the studios last year, were full of tap, jazz and eccentric dances. There was little of the classic. At first the public was pleased, but you can't give the people a steady diet of the modern. They will rebel and they did. The classics that were laid aside will come back and they'll stay back. Of course, there'll always be tap, acrobatic and modern dancing in the films. This work has a right place in the present-day machine age. It's keeping with the times. The modern dances will change but the classics we will always have with us."

Belcher continued by declaring that the coming season will see more dance spectacles on the screen than were ever thought possible for the stage. Belcher recalled the ballet of 125 for the "Phantom of the Opera" and said this number would be insignificant with the screen to be used in the future. "The wide screen will make possible ballets with 500 artists and more elaborate settings," declared this famous master, who already has produced more than 200 dance episodes for the screen.

In addition Belcher believes there is a great expectation on the screen will create a universal demand for touring companies of the dance which were in vogue fifteen years ago.

DANCE TAPS

According to Wanda, head of the Wanda School of Dancing, every pupil enrolled last season has returned for new instruction at the studio. The Club Triune, a recently instituted department of the school which meets each Friday night, is giving students the opportunity for social contacts as well as dancing instruction. The present season is in all departments in full swing.

Due to the many successful appearances of the Wanda Dancers the normal enrollment in the various branches of training offered has increased to such an extent that it has been necessary to open several new classes. Among the many professional students now preparing for stage appearances are Tommy Murray, who has signed a forty weeks' contract with Pancho and Marcos, Betty Mercer, clever tap, acrobatic and Spanish dancers, are now rehearsing for a prominent part in a musical comedy production to be released soon.

Now Appearing in New Opera

Elizabeth Wolff-Isolani, young son Walter, have been appearing in Alban Berg's modern opera "Wozzeck" at the music festival in Salzburg this summer. Mrs. Isolani sang the part of Marie and her husband has been so successful that he has been chosen to appear in Berlin and on tour in German cities.

She has been offered a part in the Berlin Staatsoper for the coming season, but has accepted an engagement with the new opera company in this place.

Kosloff Gives Dance Advice

Word comes from the Kosloff studio that Theodore Kosloff, famous for his work in film and theatrical circles, will set aside a portion of every afternoon in which he will grant interview and advise dancers who contemplate the long and arduous apprenticeship necessary for the development of real artists. The new feature promises to be a popular service to all those interested in the art of terpsichore.

CLASSICAL DANCE STILL HOLDS OWN

Productions Turning from Jazz to Older Forms, Says Irvin Belcher

They've been talking a long time about the ballet dancing regaining its own; but really, it's never gone anywhere to make it necessary to supply it with a return ticket.

Irvin Belcher declared yesterday in discussing the sudden trend of motion-picture magnates in favor of a more classical form of dance production for the screen. "I have believed the people were nothing but jazz and eccentricity," declared Belcher, "but have found out differently." The success of musical productions at most of the studios last year, which were full of tap, jazz and eccentric dances. There was little of the classic. At first the public was startled, but you can't give the people a steady diet of the modern, and they'll rebel and they did. So the dances that were laid aside for a time, but they'll stay back. Of course there'll always be tap, acrobatic and modern dancing in the picture, but each work has a right place in the present-day machine age. It's keeping pace with the times. The manner of dance will change but the classic dance will always have with us.

Belcher continued by declaring that the coming season will see more classic dance spectacles on the screen than were ever thought possible in the past. Belcher recalled the production of 1925 for the "Phantom of the Opera" and said this number was a magnificent one with the classic dance to be used in the future. He also points out that 1931 will make possible with 3000 artists and dancers in the "Ten Commandments," declared this picture, who already has more than 3000 dance episodes in the screen.

Irvin Belcher believes these productions on the screen will create a renewed demand for touring companies of the dance which have been absent for more than fifteen years ago.

DANCE TAPS

Ernest Wanis, head of the Wanis School of Dancing, every year since last season has returned to his native instruction at the Hollywood Club Trilune, a recently organized department of the club which meets each Friday evening, giving students the opportunity of social contacts as well as entertainment. The present season is to all departments indicating a very successful season.

Among the many successful appearances of the McAdam Dancers since enrollment in the various dancing training offered has been of such an extent that it is necessary to open several classes among the many productions now preparing for the season are Tommy Murray, who has signed a forty weeks contract with Fanchon and Marco, Ruth and Rose Marie Mercer, clever tap dancers, are now playing a prominent part in the musical production to be released.

Kosloff Gives Dance Advice

Word comes from the Kosloff studio that Theodore Kosloff, famous for his work in film and stage circles, will set aside a certain day every afternoon in which he will meet and advise dancers who aspire to the long and hard apprenticeship necessary for the development of real artists. Kosloff promises to be a valuable service to all those interested in the art of terpsichore.

Dancer Leaves to Supervise Film Opening

Lon Murray, director of the Lon Murray School for Stage Dancing and Dramatics, who has just completed staging the prologue for the "Birth of a Nation," has left for San Francisco to personally supervise the opening of the new issue of D. W. Griffith's film. As a preface to this picture, Murray has prepared a romantic southern prologue.

LON MURRAY

The show opens at the Geary in San Francisco for a two to four weeks run and then comes to Los Angeles for the Biltmore Theater run. Although Murray has been retained in the capacity of general stage director by Triangle Film Corporation, he will return to his school in two weeks and resume his post with the prologue when it opens here.

The staff at the Lon Murray School is adequately prepared to handle all classes and private work.

Speech Studio to Reopen for Fall Semester

Cora Mel Patten, who has just returned from a summer vacation including a six weeks' cruise to Alaska, announces the opening of her studio tomorrow.

Among the most significant activities of this institution is the Children's Theater Guild, which is opening its third season. Two groups meet on Saturday and another in midweek after school hours. The work includes dancing and dramatics. The program for this year will be an ambitious one with full-length plays rather than one act. One project will be a play chosen, directed and produced by the children themselves.

The first of the studio programs will be presented in early October by Mrs. Ormer Lawson, who will read poems, stories and a one-act play by contemporary Negro writers.

Miss Gwendolyn Kik, assistant to Miss Patten in the dramatic department, is broadcasting readings over KMPC on Mondays at 3 p.m.

Juvenile Star to Appear in Talking Film

Tommy Tucker, 15 years of age, studying at the Edward Clark Academy of Stage and Screen Arts, has been engaged by Paramount studio to appear in the cast of "Tom Sawyer," supporting Jackie Coogan.

The boy comes of a theatrical family; his mother being Alice Ward and his grandmother, Katherine Ward, the wife of the late Charles B. Ward, a noted song writer back in the nineties.

Tap Studio in New Location

Owing to the large increase in enrollment, Nat King announces the removal of his studio of Tap Dancing to larger and more central quarters, to be located on Broadway near Fifth street. The forthcoming productions for stage and screen should serve as an incentive, according to Mr. King, for all those interested in dancing as a career to brush up on their teennique. Many of his pupils are said to be appearing over the various circuits and in screen dramas.

GUEST SERIES OF TEACHERS TO CONTINUE

Adolph Bolm Next on List of International Artists at Local School

Adolph Bolm, ballet master and dancer, will start a course of instruction at the Edith Jane School of Dancing October 1 as the next international artist on the "guest instructor" series.

Trained in the Imperial School and Ballet of Petrograd, Bolm, from the time he was signed as the ballet master and first dancer for the famous Diaghileff's Russian Ballet, has been one of the outstanding figures in the dance world. He staged "Coq d'Or" and "Petroushka" at the Metropolitan Operahouse in New York. The fascinating "Birthday of the Infanta" at the Chicago Opera, of which he was ballet master for several years, and many other dance creations which were interpreted by his own organization, the Adolph Bolm Ballet. As a dancer, Bolm's artistry will live in the minds of his audiences for his interpretation of the frenzied chief in "Prince Igor," the reckless, drunken slave in "Scheherazade," or the deep emotion of his "Pierrot," the lover of Cleopatra.

Mr. Bolm was appointed head of the committee on dance arrangements for the World's Fair of 1933 and is assembling all the dance material of the United States and Europe for this event.

Academy Adds Staff Members

The Fontaine-Dollini Academy has enlarged its staff with a corps of European teachers for piano and violin.

The dancing classes which are featured at the studio are under the personal supervision of Miss Fontaine-Dollini.

Drama, speech, elocution, pronunciation, pantomime, make-up are in the hands of George Dollini, stage and screen actor-director, well known on the English and American stage.

Pupils of the Fontaine-Dollini Academy are appearing at present on the Fanchon and Marco circuits and in the talking pictures. Duncan Renaldo, contract feature player with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of "Trader Horn" film fame, is one of the schools pupils.

CHICAGO NOW PORTRAYED

Harry Langdon is now featured in "See America Thirst" for Universal. It is intended as the first satirical slant on the "great American racket," epitomized by the gang methods in Chicago.

OWSLEY ONCE CRITIC

Monroe Owsley, former Broadway actor, recently signed for one of the leading roles in "Meet the Widow," a Pathe college comedy, used to be a junior opera and dramatic critic on an eastern newspaper.

Speech, Arts and Music on New Schedule

Among the interesting schools to embark upon a fall term with a well-planned and worked-out schedule is the Barber School of Speech and Music, located at the Ryan Studios on Figueroa.

Under the direction of Julia Barber the school was founded to give instruction in the Speech Arts and Music, under skillful and experienced teachers. Every effort has been made to give out only practical instruction in the special fields, but also the general education which every one interested in these subjects should have.

Julia Barber attended Fulton and Trueblood School of Expression, Christian College, Columbia, Mo., and the Boston School of Oratory. She has been dramatic coach for the Colorado Springs High School, director of speech in the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music as well as in Los Angeles schools. She was also instructor of drama for the WaWan Club, the Wilshire Woman's Club, and many other exclusive organizations. Mrs. Barber also directs the Barber Players, well known for their work over the radio.

Associated with Mrs. Barber in the organization are William S. Barber, well known for his forensic work in eastern as well as western universities, and Virginia Barber, who has appeared in a number of professional stage productions.

Other instructors include Lillian Hayes, expression and pantomime; Lucile Ramsey, piano, harmony and theory; Frances Forster, violin. Dancing is given through affiliation with the Ernest Ryan Academy.

Proteges Win Professional Engagements

Word comes from the Bud Murray School for Stage and Screen, that Tut Mace, youthful acrobatic and off-rhythm dancer, was recently sent to the Tabor Grand Theater in Denver, to join the Fanchon and Marco "Hollywood Collegians" idea. Other Bud Murray proteges who have left the studio for professional engagements include the California Sunbeams, who are touring in the "Wild and Wooly" idea; Sylvia Shore, who left this week for a forty weeks' tour with the "Modes" idea, and Nelson and Thatcher, appearing with the new Paramount stage shows.

The fall term at the Murray school is scheduled to open the 15th inst. The faculty includes Mary Frances Taylor, head of the ballet department, Lafe Page, associate and instructor in tap and off-rhythm, Gladys Murray, children's department, Byron Cramer, assistant dance director, and Hazel Hulse, pianist.

FOURTEENTH YEAR BEGINS

Enrollment has opened at the Hollywood Community School of the Theater for the fall term which opens tomorrow, ushering in the fourteenth consecutive year of the oldest dramatic school in Hollywood, an outgrowth of Neely Dickson's Hollywood Community Theater, recognized as one of the leading little theaters in America.

MILDRED VOORHEES

Courses will be offered in voice and diction, pantomime, play production, interpretation, stage technique, acting, stage craft, radio broadcasting, tone placement, screen technique and dancing. Miss Dickson is assisted by a capable faculty, the members of which combine the advantages of a university training and practical experience in the professional theater.

In addition to the regular classroom work, Miss Dickson stresses the importance of frequent public appearance for her students. To this end she arranges a series of workshop performances each term, together with appearances in professional engagements.

Among the graduates of the Hollywood Community School of the Theater are numbered many prominent stage and screen actors, both here and in the East.

One of the new courses at the school is the work in radio broadcasting. Actual experience for advanced students in this line is arranged through an affiliation with KHJ by which Miss Dickson furnishes a program each week.

Mildred Voorhees, assistant director of the studio, has played the lead in "Felecita," San Diego county Mission Play, for her fifth consecutive year.

YOUNGSTERS FIND DANCE REAL SPORT

Children Spend Moments Between Shots Checking Terpsichore Notes

Thirty of the thirty-five children included in the schoolroom sequences of Paramount's production of "Tom Sawyer" are professional dancers.

The between-scene interludes on the set are a scramble of tumultuous children, going through the paces of acrobatic routine, taps, ballet exercises, soft shoe steps and chorus high kicks.

Jackie Coogan, who plays the title role of the picture, adds a vigorous buck and wing dance to this ensemble of accomplishment.

Mitzi Green, in spite of the impeding hoops and pantalettes of her Becky Thatcher impersonation, succeeds in completing cartwheels and handsprings by way of keeping fit. After a year's training in a local school of dance, Mitzi is a skilled tap dancer. She also has mastered a number of chorus routines, glides through soft shoe work with ease and is well-versed in the elementary essentials of ballet.

Junior Durkin, enacting the famous characterization of Huckleberry Finn, won the laurels of the masculine group in tags.

Dick Winslow, the Joe Harper of the story, effectuates a noteworthy acrobatic performance, with promise of becoming deft in the art of adagio dancing. All impromptu music for the youthful "steppers" is furnished by the versatile Dick, who manipulates an accordion, banjo, ukulele, piano and organ with equal talent.

Of the thirty children in the professional dancing class, twenty were given dancing instructions at 3 years of age, five between the ages of 4 and 6, and five after 6.

Bevani will Coach Picture

Alexander Bevani, opera coach and impresario, has been chosen to play a role in an Italian talking picture at the Hal Roach studios with Laurel and Hardy. This is a tribute to the Italian diction of Maestro Bevani, as the picture is for release in Italy.

WILLS ADDS TO DANCING STAFF

George Boyce

The staff of teachers at the Wills Studio of Stage Dancing in Hollywood will be greatly increased during the coming week with a number of well-known masters of the terpsichorean art, according to Walter S. Wills, executive head of the school.

George Boyce arrived recently from New York to specialize with the latest vogue in off-rhythm dancing technique. He is one of the best-known dancing instructors in New York City. Jimmy Fawcett, who has acted as the premier acrobat of Fanchon and Marco units for the past five years will teach professional acrobatics.

Buddy Eson, ballet master, will be in full charge of ballet, toe dancing, musical comedy and jass steps. The tap and acrobatic classes, which will include doubles, groups and ensembles, will be in charge of Wilian Ritchay.

STUDENTS CAST IN PLAYS

The task of staging, casting and directing the McGroarty Summer Play Festival now in its fourth week at Tujunga, was assigned in its entirety to Edwin N. Wallack, head of the Harrison - Wallack Studios. Employing more than 100 actors, singers and dancers, these three plays, with "Osceola" running currently, have attracted thousands of tourists and Californians for miles around.

LUCILE WIDEMAN.

Although professional players appear in most of the principal roles, Mr. Wallack is gratified at the showing made by the students of the Harrison-Wallack Studios.

"My pupils have given a splendid account of themselves," says Mr. Wallack. "La Verne Mohr, playing her first lead in a production, has received generous praise, for her Cicely Lou in 'El Dorado,' her Conception in 'La Golondrina' and now as Shenlee in 'Osceola.' Malcolm Jelks has carried the heavy character roles in the three plays with much credit and Joseph Ormsby reveals a fine sense of characterization. Lucile Wideman has long been a pupil of mine and has appeared in a number of dance revues. She is a talented youngster and will go far. Helen Barruth is another student of mine who has acquitted herself well."

Mr. Wallack resumes his classes at the studios with the opening of the fall term, September 15. He has received flattering offers to direct other professional productions during the season and expects to use all pupils who qualify in a number of them. Drama, dancing, music, instrumental and vocal, diction and languages are all included in the regular course offered at the studios.

SUCCESS WON BY DANCERS

Two specialty dancers who received their dance training from Earle Wallance were featured last week at two Los Angeles theaters. Betty Grable was featured in the Publix stage show at the Paramount Theater last week and Jean Macdonald was featured in the Fanchon and Marco "Rhythm-a-Tic Idea" at Loew's State Theater. Both dancers are signed for the entire tour of each circuit which is about thirty-six weeks.

Another Earle Wallace team of dancers is Franklyn and Warner who opened last week in the Publix stage show in San Francisco. This team of acrobatic dancers will also tour the entire Publix circuit, going East after playing the Publix theaters on the Pacific Coast.

The Hawley Sisters, Gayl and Dot, are being kept busy by the local R.-K.-O. office, filling club dates while they are waiting to be featured in a new dance act over the entire R.-K.-O. circuit. They received their training at the Earle Wallace studios.

TWO NOTABLE NEW NOVELS

"Edwardians" Shows Aridity of Aristocratic Tradition; "Angel Pavement" Creates Its Own London

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

THE EDWARDIANS. A novel. By V. Sackville-West. Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York.

"The Edwardians" is, as Miss Page Cooper of Doubleday, Doran well says, a roman de moeurs, a story of the early nineteen hundreds when great beauties and dandies flourished around King Edward and life in the great country houses had a fantastic sort of butterfly splendor.

With irony and yet with a certain tenderness Miss Sackville-West has re-created the life in which she grew up, the dukes and duchesses, the belles and philanderers who went from week-end party to week-end party, pursuing their amours and trying to amuse their king. The setting is Knole, with its seven acres of roof, called Chevron in the story.

Knole Castle in Kent has been the home of the Sackvilles for five centuries. Miss Sackville-West has herself lived there. But she is delightfully free from any sentimentality about it. In fact, she sees it as a great caravansary that is a left-over from another period, and that, with all its magnificence and all its appeal to the imagination, threatens the happiness of its owners.

V. Sackville-West

Lucy, widow of the eleventh duke, accepted Chevron with its retinue of servants, its tenantry, its exacting obligations and its restraint on individual liberty, and managed to enjoy it all. She delighted to entertain her king and her peers and even dared to intrude a few outsiders who were rich enough or entertaining enough to attract her. She hated to think of the time when her son Sebastian would marry and she would be forced to go to the dower house.

But Sebastian at 19 was dissatisfied. One side of him responded to his ducal position and loved Chevron; the other saw the aridity of the life there and longed for freedom. He was to learn in the next two years how tightly tradition bound him. He was free to have an affair with the court beauty, Lady Roehampton, and with an artist's model who happened to be intelligent; to dally with his keeper's daughter, and to invite to Chevron and try to seduce the innocent wife of his doctor. He could spend money lavishly and make himself notorious by his life as a young rake. But there were certain things barred to a duke.

He was tempted to throw it all over and go with the critical explorer who had awakened his mind. On one side stood freedom to live a sane and full life, free from inherited obligations; on the other were the honors and responsibilities he was supposed to accept.

As to what he did, that is the point of the story.

In it Miss Sackville-West shows herself a competent novelist who has been able to control her wandering pen as she has not in her earlier work. She has written a vital story of a transition age and has pointed it with wit and managed to maintain an air of detach-

ANGEL PAVEMENT. A Novel of London. By J. B. Priestley. Harper & Bros., New York.

J. B. Priestley's "The Good Companions" has for a year topped the best sellers in England and has sold over 100,000 couples in the United States. This in face of the fact that it is not at all in the prevailing mode, but is instead a leisurely, whimsical, good-humored novel that reflects belief in mankind and in the goodness of life. Now he has turned from provincial England to London. I always like a novel to begin and end like a roundelay, with the repetition of the first scene in the last. Priestly does this. He begins with a prologue in which the adventurous Golspie disembarks from a Baltic shop at London and he ends with an epilogue showing this same mischief-maker on a cargo ship bound for South America.

In the interim Golspie has upset the lives of a little group of people whose stories are bound together through their connection with the firm of Twigg and Dersingham, with offices in Angel Pavement. Golspie came to London with a seemingly sound business proposition, which he put up to Dersingham. With its acceptance a new animation took possession of the office, Smeeth, the middle-aged office manager; Miss Mattfield, the self-sufficient stenographer; Turgis, the junior clerk, and even the office boy, who was always playing detective, found a new zest in life.

Priestley dwells restfully on the idiosyncracies of each of his characters, which is why he is so often compared to Dickens. His method is to present as fully as possible each phase of life, from the small domestic problems to the heartaches and passionate efforts of his befuddled humans to attain their desires. Thus he creates, as it were, a cosmos of his own in which his characters live and struggle and meet victory or defeat. And all the time we are aware that it is London life we are seeing with ordinary human beings doing their small best to carry on under the conditions of today.

If you like to read a story slowly, being content to have each scene fully developed so that all its essence is there; if you are ready to chortle over the antics of an office boy immersed in "shaddering" innocent suspects; to smile at the humor of the faithful Smeeth; to listen to Mrs. Smeeth's chatter; to sympathize with the dissatisfied and ineffective Mrs. Dersingham in her narrow ambitions; to watch the silly Turgis make a fool of himself over a hard-boiled girl; in short, to read Mr. Priestly for the pungency of his observations, for his mellow sympathy, his gusto, his wisdom and his understanding of the human scene, you'll find "Angel Pavement" to your liking.

Gossip of the Book World

A Doctor's Story

"Doctor Serocold" is a first novel by Helen Ashton, written in response to a challenge from her husband, who said it would be impossible to write a complete story about one day in a doctor's life. Having herself practiced medicine, Miss Ashton had her material well in hand and she so shaped it that in following the old doctor of the title through one of his long days we learn not only his story, but also that of most of the villagers in which he had practised for forty years. The novel is highly praised by Frank Swinnerton. It is published by Doubleday, Doran & Co.

Editor Shows How

Joseph T. Shaw, editor of Black Mask, a magazine devoted to mystery stories, decided to show his contributors just what he wanted in the way of fiction. So he wrote "Derelict," now published by Alfred A. Knopf, in which the most amazing series of events occurs on a sinking ship, mysteriously deserted by passengers and crew. Whizbang at first thinks he is alone, but soon discovers two suspicious-acting men, who keep him guessing. A glimpse of a red-haired girl complicates things in a story as full of surprising turns and twists as a labyrinth.

Autobiographies Prove Popular

A fourth revised edition of "Modern American Poetry" which Louis Untermeyer has edited for Harcourt, Brace is recent publication. The first edition in 1919 filled only 174 pages, the new edition runs to 900 pages and includes, in addition to the biographies and critical notes, 730 poems by 153 poets. The fourth edition is a new volume in every sense; new type, a new format, and much new material. Untermeyer's two anthologies, "Modern American Poetry" and "Modern British Poetry" have already, in their various editions and bindings, sold over 275,000 copies.

More Good Reprints

The first "Blue Ribbon Books," just issued at $1, are "Why We Behave Like Human Beings," "Mother India" and "Black Majesty." Two of them are well worth republication. They are issued through the combined efforts of Dodd Mead, Harcourt, Brace, Harper's and Little, Brown. "Black Majesty" retains all six of the colored illustrations and the three colored end-papers and the format of all three books is excellent.

A Group of Recent Books

STRESEMANN. By Rudolf Olden. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

As Chancellor and Foreign Minister Gustav Stresemann led Germany out of the wilderness into which her policy of passive resistance to reconstruction measures had landed her and definitely turned her to a new view of her responsibilities. To him is credited Germany's acceptance of the Dawes plan and the Locarno agreements, which opened the way to her entry into the League of Nations. His policy forwarded the Young plan and hastened the evacuation of the occupied territory. In a sentence, then, Stresemann's efforts started Germany on a new policy intended to restore her as an equal among other nations.

That his beginnings gave little promise of his great career is made plain in this account of his life. Born in Berlin over his father's beer shop, he early showed ability and was elected to the Reichstag, where for years he consistently supported the Kaiser, the militarists, the program for colonial empire. During the war he stood pat and was called "Ludendorff's young man." But once Germany's program collapsed, he organized the new People's party and set to work to restore Germany as a nation among others. That he worked himself to death in the cause is admitted by friends and foes. But he died knowing that he had gone far in the accomplishment of his life's purpose.

Classic Reissued

New numbers in Everyman's Library just issued are Karl Marx's "Capital;" Richard Jefferies's "Bevis;" Smollett's "Peregrine Pickle;" "Minor Poets of the XVIII Century;" Lessing's "Laocoon;" Vol. II. of the "Shorter Novels, Jacobean and Restoration;" "The Heimskringla;" Rabelais; "American Short Stories of the XIX Century;" Adam Mickiewicz's "Pan Tadeusz;" and Defoe's "Moll Flanders."

HOLLYWOOD MURDER MYSTIFIES

BY PAUL JORDAN-SMITH

THE SARANOFF MURDER. By Mark Lee Luther and Lillian C. Ford. Bobbs-Merrill, Indianapolis.

Once again those of us who delight in thrillers are indebted to the happy collaboration of Mrs. Ford and Mr. Luther. Their "Card 13" was a convincing yarn, and Arthur Raneleigh a charming detective, aans the conventional headfull of cosmic omniscience.

In the new story Raneleigh is on the ground at the moment of the murder, and starts working, rather reluctantly to be sure, with his old friend Kent, on what proves to be a more than ordinarily perplexing mystery. One recognizes other old friends: the garrulous, pompous, rhetorical old lawyer Boggs; the dignified butler, William Hacker; romantic, hero-adoring Aileen Raneleigh, and, to top them all, that emotional, hysterical, fiery-tempered movie queen, Selma Saranoff, once the peasant Saranoffski, by way of New York gutters.

The reader is not kept long waiting for things to happen: a typical movie set party, amusingly cosmopolitan and a bit florid; an intimate preview of Selma's latest picture; two pairs of eyes, looking daggers; a bit of jealous by-play, and then . . . murder!

The Saranoff queen lives, as befits her rank, in a palace: she has money enough and jewels enough to tempt a lone wolf yegg, a gang of gunmen, or a whole regiment of politicians: was loot the motive? Or was it jealousy? A very gracious and charming lady is Miss Helene Mauboussin and Selma would seem to have charmed away from her arms her very own Count Tialdi. The eye of suspicion falls upon her at once. Then there is the Count himself: had he, in a moment of Latin fury, strangled the temperamental actress? His conduct indicates guilt. There is Elsa Larson, the pretty maid, who seems to hide somewhat behind a mask of engaging frankness; and William Hacker, the butler, is not telling all he knows. Why does he want to leave the spot? In fact, suspicion is pretty evenly divided, and, as the investigation proceeds, the problem is complicated by new evidence and some astonishing alibis. Detective Kent's theories and Raneleigh's intuitions are frequently in conflict, and even the all-informed, experienced reader is baffled.

And yet the authors have dealt fairly with the reader: he has the clues—all of them—, as soon as they are discovered; and when at last the mystery is cleared he will acknowledge that, though he may have picked the wrong villain, he has all along known the facts that should have led him to the right one.

The atmosphere of the story is realistic. The reader who knows his Hollywood will own that the picture is in focus. And the story moves along swiftly enough for the most jaded reader, picking him up with a jerk just as he thinks matters are all settled. There will be no time for a comfortable nod.

Raneleigh is not the sort of detective at whom one habitually sneers, nor the sort that befuddles one with ponderous technical learning. He is a real human being, apt to make mistakes, but blessed with keen insight: the sort that the reader will want to meet again.

All told, "The Saranoff Murder" is an advance over "Card 13." Perhaps the surprise at the end is not so shocking as in the earlier story, but the action is swifter and the succession of events more exciting. Without doubt "The Saranoff Murder" belongs in the front rank of the year's detective stories.

BRITISH GENERAL ATTACKS WAR

A BRASS HAT IN NO MAN'S LAND. By Brig.-Gen. F. P. Crozier. Cape & Smith, New York.

An appropriate title for this stirring book would be "Through Hell on the Western Front." For that is how that shell-raked, gas-choked, bloody line is pictured by this British brigadier-general who at last comes out in the open and fights against war waged for any purpose.

Brig.-Gen. Crozier fought not in the safe headquarters camps of the rear, but in the front-line trenches. He was regimental officer, battalion commander and brigade commander. As battalion commander on the Somme he led a thousand Ulstermen to slaughter at Thiepval. As brigade commander at Bourlon Wood he took part in what he calls the Welsh epic, one of the minor engagements that had a major influence on that particular phase of the struggle then in progress.

Gen. Crozier is no civilian dragooned into war and resenting its hardships. He is a soldier born and bred. His long military career does not in the least blind him to the horrors of war. Instead, he writes with a fire and a force that shows his burning hatred, not for the hardships or the dangers or the inconveniences that war brought to him personally, but for the barbarous business in all its phases. For him, as an officer, the art of instilling blood-lust into his man was just a part of the day's work. While doing this mechanically, almost automatically, in the back of his mind he clearly saw the horror and the hypocracy of it all. To him war is that last resort of fools. He is one of the thinking men who fought with both professional and patriotic zeal, but who did not let the game blind him to the silliness, the tragedy, the awful and unnecessary folly of the whole performance.

There is no hatred in this man's make-up. His scorn for the responsible statesmen that permitted war to occur is monumental. But his pity goes out alike to all men, mere pawns on the checkerboard of mistaken national policy. It is not alone the horrible slaughter, the maiming of men, the ruthless killing of women and children that he resents. It is the moral morass into which war plunges those participating in it. His picture of fine upstanding English youth, released from the restraints and influences of home life and deteriorating under the vitiating effects of war, is as convincing as it is harrowing.

Gen. Crozier's book is a damning indictment of war in all its phases. His purpose is to instill in his readers a horror for and a determination to fight, with every possible weapon that sanity may suggest, for peace, lasting peace, a peace that will, in time, make mankind finally see what folly, what crime, what blind insanity, is war.

Why Have Insomnia?

"Sleep" by Donald A. Laird and and Charles G. Muller is the result of several years of research and experimentation under the direction of Dr. Laird of the psychological laboratory of Colgate University. It tells how much sleep we need, why we often fail to get it and what we must do to become perfect sleepers. Specific directions as to springs, mattress, covers, sleeping position and how to relax, along with much else of value, are found in this volume, published by John Day.

American Etchings Shown

There opens tomorrow at Barker Bros., Mezzanine Picture Shops, an exhibition of prints by American etchers including Cadwallader Washburn with examples from his famous Morrocan portrait series, D. S. MacLaughlan, Frank Benson, famous for bird subjects, Armin Hansen with Monterey fishermen, the late Ernest Haskell, poet on copper of western trees and hills; Troy Kinney of the dance, Phillip Kappell and others. Dog etchers, child etchers, architectural etchers and several California etchers will also be represented.

Forsythe Shows Variety

Clyde Forsythe, "Vic" of the comic strips, is at the Biltmore Salon with the most interesting, because the most varied, group of paintings he has yet shown here. For a time he stuck closely to his pictures of the desert—a low horizon, the cone of San Jacinto and a great cumulus cloud. His long study of the desert gave him a fine grip on its forms and atmospheric perspective. He is known too for his portrayal of prospectors in desert settings. In this exhibit he shows an example of the prospector type which is a real advance in the "jackass school" of painting. It is called "The Homesteader" and by its charm as a composition transcends the usual illustrative limits of the theme.

"I WONDER WHAT HAPPENED AFTER I LEFT?"

A drawing by Don Herold, from "The Future of Drinking," in exhibition of originals at the Zeitlin book store.

In his pictures of pines at Big Bear he introduces a new theme. In some of the smaller tree pictures—one of the four pines against the lake and another of a cypress in Cajon Pass he gives us fine authoritative records. Forsythe always draws well. Sometimes his color grows oversweet for my taste, as in the otherwise well-designed pictures of trees in snow. Perhaps that is why I welcome his latest departure—pictures of the prize ring. Forsythe is a fight fan and the smoky air will not permit sweetened color. There is life and power to his bruisers and authenticity to the setting. Finally another of his enthusiasms comes out in a little golf picture—very charming in air, movement and color.

Clyde Forsythe was born in Orange, Cal. He worked on Hearst papers here and in New York, was at one time illustrator of Brisbane's editorials, and now is an independent cartoonist maintaining three comic strips. He has homes in Alhambra and Big Bear.

The Future of Drinking

Gilbert Seldes discusses this popular subject in the book of that name but Don Herold is the real hero. His drawings for the book, being on exhibition now at Zeitlin's book store, touch that clear lunacy which is the despair of more pedestrian cartoonists. He is a master of ludicrous design, just how brilliant is best seen in the drawing illustrating the release brought by a spree. He has conventionalized his own pointed nose, round pinhead and sharply jointed figure and with the limitations of this single model can project any type and any idea or emotion. That is the essence of the artistic imagination, anyway—to imagine oneself experiencing that which one portrays. Thus we see Don Herold sitting on his bed wondering what happened after he left the party; Don Herold trying to desert a drinking party of three more Don Heroldo who cajole him back. He is not, like Hogarth, trying to point a moral. His woman drinker would tempt no lady to imitation. He is rather a funny man in the tradition of the immortal Lewis Carroll, a transcendent lunatic of the pen, an Ed Wynn of the comics.

NO. 11—MILLARD SHEETS

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

At 22, Millard Owen Sheets is an unparalleled phenomenon in the world of Southern California. Critics have hailed with enthusiasm his paintings and prints that pour out from his hands; a host of artists and students look to him as their ideal and example, even a teacher of recognized power. His heart to his brush, and his brush to his board and in every California can port, poured out a stream of brilliant water colors. Every time he reached the Coast he sent home a complete exhibition. How he found time to do the daily love letter remains a

IS NATIVE SON

Born in Pomona in 1907 Sheets is of that ardent, sunny, blond type of youth which seems peculiar to Southern California, keenly responsive to the light, color and warmth of this region and the vigorous, if raw, spirit of progress and optimism that gives tang to life here.

As I write I look at a water color done by him three years ago. The transparent tints, miraculous in their swift placing and absolute rightness have little in common with the wild crude, thrashing of youthful "self-expression," such as one often sees in the schools. Discipline and training are very evident.

Millard's mother died soon after his birth and his own life hung in the balance. But he was fortunate in possessing an understanding grandmother who found him the materials he wanted as a child who liked to draw and color, and, sensing the fine stuff in the boy, she made sacrifices for a future she believed in. At high school he went through the customary art classes. Perhaps more important—distinctly related to the swift certainty that characterizes his later work—was his enthusiastic participation in baseball, basketball and tennis at this time, storing resilient energy against the long hours of work to come later.

FINE INSTRUCTORS

While attending high school in the valley he came to the attention of Theodore B. Modra, well-known artist, who instructed and encouraged him and is his friend to this day. Upon graduation from school the young artist steered a direct course toward mastery of his materials and he was fortunate, during three years of study at the Chouinard School of Art, to have for his masters painters so fine yet so different in outlook as F. Tolles Chamberlin and Clarence Hinkle. Chamberlin must have directed his attention to poised rectitude and well balanced architectural design, giving him the knowledge of color relations that distinguishes his painting. Hinkle—adventurous, experimental, would counterbalance the restraint of Chamberlin, encouraging so gifted a student to find his own way and walk boldly in it.

And this was only his daytime activity. After school he would paint water colors while the light held and then at night pick up the etching needle, turning out from the beginning plates with a charm, skill and delicacy that mark him the born etcher. In still other odd moments he found time to paint many wall decorations such as those on the walls of the Pasadena Y.M.C.A. plunge.

Went After Prizes

Behold then, young Sheets at 21, planning on a European excursion. He was eager to see what the rest of the world was doing. Money was necessary. Why not win a few prizes? He went like an athlete after cups, putting his brilliant best into canvases that took the breath of California and Arizona jurors and started the necessary nest egg. Then he tackled a real one, gaining the second prize of $1750 in the "Texas Ranch Life" division of the Texas national competition for oil paintings in the spring of 1929, with a painting of a California cotton field. After that award his paintings were hung in many places throughout the country and Dalzell Hatfield, the art dealer here, was so convinced of his quality, that he presented a large Sheets exhibition, giving the young artist the full sale price of works sold and taking examples of his work in lieu of commission.

Enter Romance

Sheets does everything early. Just before his time to go he fell in love with the sudden ardor of youth. He met Mary Baskerville, charming little co-ed of U.C.L.A., in devastatingly romantic circumstances, for it was love at first sight in beautiful Andreas Canyon at Palm Springs. He wanted to be married at once and take her with him but her wise parents said she must finish her college course. So he set off alone, hugging a little water-color portrait of his sweet-

Sunday School Lesson

The International Sunday School Lesson for September 14 is, "Jeremiah: the Prophet of Individual Religion."—Jeremiah i, 1-10; xiv, 7-22; xxxi, 27-34.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Within the past twenty-five years we have had the rosewater stage of philosophy; then, in reaction, we have had the sewer stage, from which we are at present emerging. Now we are ready for the sunlight stage; for sunlight clears and cleanses and sometimes burns. Everyday light upon everyday life and the eternal shining of God's own truth is our greatest immediate need. Probably the next step to which the people will give heed will not be the sophisticated fulmination of mountain schoolmen; but great souls from out of the commonality of life, like the Hebrew prophets. There was no novelty or subtlety about the utterances of these sent of God—but how their simple, fundamental truths did burn!

Even the Einstein theories, much more than philosophy and psychology of the plain people an unintelligible jargon. Not so with Jeremiah and his fellow-prophets. All their messages were wrapped in bundles of clear speech, so that the ordinary man could hear them away. They were free of "cash and carry" business in popular religious instruction. What they had to say was for everybody's understanding.

Courage is the first qualification for a prophet, whether he stands in the street or on a platform, or sits at a mahogany editorial desk or in a teacher's chair. He must speak plainly. Many people are utterly weary of the "jeremiads of Canaan" from the lips of those who seem unable to state, in terms of today, what they really mean. When God really gives a man a message it is sure to be in such a sense, that can be explicitly stated in terms which even a child can understand. Let it be said, then, that the preachers and teachers who are wanderers in a wilderness of archaic and abstruse ideas are no real prophets. What-ever comes from God is too vital to be concealed by a cloud of vocabulary. Religion is often misnamed "schoolcraft" when it is only muddy-mindedness. All who follow in the steps of Jeremiah are first of all clear-minded in making their meaning

PRAISING PRESENT PROPHETS

The prophet business is serious, not to cheerful dispensing of commonplace. Old Jeremiah, who, for forty years, with tireless versatility, addressed his word, would not be a welcome member of one of our optimist groups, which are forever whistling lightly that everything is going well in this best of all possible worlds. They called him, in his day, a whining prophet," for the woes and the sickness of his people wrung from him with grief. Let it be said frankly that any person who can view the whole gamut of the world's life today without a heavy heart is either unintelligent or else [illegible] selfish.

Honest and informed men are ready not to hear they listen to some of our over-zeal "leaders" protesting that all is well with present-day society; that they are cleaner, nobler and more [illegible] than those of any previous generation. These same optimists are not impressed with the state of the union as it is of the nation. They appeal to the "business" and "economy" of modern literature; and are sure that the realms of finance and business are led by great and praiseworthy men.

Well, Jeremiah knew that same [illegible]. Only he called them false prophets, and pronounced Jehovah's word of doom upon them. The [illegible] of Jeremiah must make unfavorable reading for these [illegible] of "Everything - is - lovely-and-the-goose-honks-high" school, whose messages never cause any sort of [illegible] to squirm.

THE PROPHETS WE MADE

Jeremiah had a sure standard, by which he judged his world and his [illegible]. He was supremely aware of the character of the holy God, and was he by the sense of Jehovah's righteousness, and of Jehovah's clear commands, that he [illegible] measure men by no lesser [illegible].

Ignorance, cruelty, greed, oppression and unbridled lust in high places meant to him that the living God had been flouted, and that there was a reckoning to pay. His [illegible] was no jellyfish, characterless [illegible]; but a God whose [illegible] required obedience from [illegible] to His explicit laws of righteousness. And that God is still [illegible].

Jeremiah was no tickler of the ears of the mighty, no panderer to the whims of king and court. His [illegible] lifted him up to the [illegible] of his task: "Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth: see, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out and to break down and to destroy and to overthrow, to build and to plant."

THE BIGGEST JOB OF ALL

To represent one's nation abroad, as ambassador or minister, is the highest privilege that can come to one in public life. But a larger and the greatest honor of all, is to be the sent servant, the real representative and mandated mouthpiece of the Living God to one's fellow human beings. That is the prophet's office. It raised Jeremiah above all his fellows above all courtiers and kings and assemblies of counselors.

The prophet's "Thus saith the Lord" took precedence of all legal enactments. Whenever a great soul is sure that he is the ambassador of the Almighty, we have a Jeremiah, a Luther, a Knox; and [illegible] are changed.

"Safe"—and timid—school of thought today insists that the church must not touch politics or business affairs. Every boodler and grafter and crook and racketeer applauds this code. If Jeremiah had lived by it, he would have been put down as a prophet. True, Jeremiah also have escaped persecution, unpopularity and hunger and sorry sojourn and exile; for [illegible] better lesson ever as possible [illegible] of a true prophet's [illegible].

Sunday School Lesson

The International Sunday School Lesson for September 14 is, "Jeremiah: A Prophet of Individual Religion."—Jeremiah i, 1-10; xiv, 7-22; xxxi, 27-34.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Within the past twenty-five years we have had the rosewater stage of religion; then, in reaction, we had the sewer stage, from which we are at present emerging. Now we are ready for the sunlight stage, for sunlight clears and heals, and sometimes burns. Applied upon everyday life the eternal shining of God's truth is our greatest immediate need. Probably the next step which the people will give will not be, the sophisticated and the schoolmen; but great souls out of the commonality like the Hebrew prophets. There was no novelty or subtlety in the utterances of these sent of God—but how their simple, homely truths did burn!

As Einstein theories, much as psychoanalyzing and psychology may puzzle people an unintelligent way. Not so with Jeremiah and his fellow-prophets. All their messages were wrapped in bundles of words, so that the ordinary man could hear them and carry them away. They were of the "push and carry" business order religious instruction. The only thing they had to say was for men's understanding.

Perhaps the first qualification for a prophet, whether he stands in the pulpit or on a platform, or sits at a journalistic desk or in a teacher's chair, is that he must speak plainly. Many people are utterly weary of the "Shibboleth of Canaan" from the lips of those who seem unable to state, in the language of today, what they really believe. When God really gives a message it is sure to be understood; there can be explicitly no mistaking which even a child can understand. Let it be said then, that the preachers and teachers who are wanderers in a wilderness of archaic and abstruse phrases are no real prophets. Whatever else God is too vital to be represented by a cloud of vocabulary. Religion is often mismanned "scholastic" when it is only muddy-headed. All who follow in the footsteps of Jeremiah are first of all concerned in making their meaning clear.

THE PRESENT PROPHETS

The prophet's business is serious, with special dispensing of consolation. Old Jeremiah, who, for all his with tireless versatility, varied his word, would not be a welcome member of one of our optimistic groups, which are forever assuring that everything is for the best of all possible worlds. They called him, in his day, a "croaking prophet," for the woes and lamentations of his people wrung from his grief. Let it be said to the credit of any person who can take the whole gamut of the world today without a heavy heart, he is unintelligent or else color-blind.

Not that informed men are blind when they listen to some of the great "leaders" protesting overmuch with present-day conditions are cleaner, nobler and more moral than those of any previous period. Maybe these same optimists are out of touch with the state of the nation. They appreciate "cleanness" and "honesty" in government; and are sure that the wisdom of finance and business is to be left by great and praiseworthy men.

Jeremiah knew that same thing. He called them false prophets and pronounced Jehovah's judgments upon them. The prophet of Jeremiah must make unpleasant reading for these days of "Everything - is - lovely - and - the - banks - high" school, whose sermons never cause any sort of disquiet.

THE PROPHETS ARE MADE

Jeremiah had a sure standard, by which to judge his world and his fellowmen. He was supremely aware of the character of the holy God. He knew that he by the sense of God's righteousness, and of God's commands, that he was to measure men by no lesser standard.

Social cruelty, greed, oppression, unbridled lust in high places—all these he knew must come to him that the living God had been flouted, and that there was a reckoning to pay. His people were to jellyfish, characterless and spineless; but a God whose people owed obedience from them to His explicit laws of righteousness. And that God is still living.

Jeremiah was no tickler of the ears of the mighty, no panderer to the whims of king and court. His God-given task lifted him up to the high office of: "Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth: see, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to break down and to destroy, and to overthrow, to build and to plant."

THE GREATEST JOB OF ALL

Whether one's nation abroad, be ambassador or minister, is the highest privilege that can come to a man in public life. But a larger and more glorious greatest honor of all, to be God's servant, the real mouthpiece and mandated mouthpiece of the Living God to one's fellow human beings. That is the prophet's office. It raised Jeremiah high above all courtiers and above all assemblies of councilors.

The prophet's "Thus saith the Lord" was the weightiness of all legal documents. Wherever a great soul has arisen that he is the ambassador of the Almighty, we have a Luther, a Knox; and we are ashamed.

The cowardly—and timid—school of thought insists that the pulpit must not touch politics or economics. Every boodler and grafter and racketeer applauds this. If Jeremiah had been there he would have been put down as a prophet. True, he would not have escaped persecution, popularity and hunger and imprisonment and exile; for he was as free as possible from the faults of a true prophet's character.

BUILT IN TECHNICOLOR

Cecil B. DeMille, director and named by his colleagues best in a poll conducted by them, is making his first color picture. It is Warner's forthcoming Million Francheck, based on the stage success of that name. In the cast are Oland, Claudia Dell, Charles Starrett, John Halliday, Evelyn Brent, Helen Broderick and

THE International Adventurers, of which Col. Ed Bailey of San Marino is president, and whose legal counselor is J. Calvin Brown, is that branch of the old Adventurers' Club here, which seceded with hauteur some time ago.

Unlike so many male adventurers, these gentlemen gladly include the ladies, so that Mrs. Marie Byrd, as well as her famous spouse, is a member, together with Lady May Drummond, Lady Nancy Astor, Lady Mary Heath, Madame Schumann-Heinck and Mrs. Ulysses Grant McGonen. The male list is most imposing, too, since it includes Admiral Byrd, Sir Hubert Wilkins, Field Marshal Lord Allenby, Maj. F. R. Burnham and so on through a stylish array of famous names. But they also took in the youngster who was lost in the woods—Harold Eugene Johnson, as they felt he had the making of a good adventurer.

This club insists that it is most discriminating—can't get in just by paying a fee—have to have one's adventurous record looked into pretty severely. They have a house flag that has already gone on great missions. It now goes with Bromley on his flight from Tokio, for instance. A club of this kind helps to spread the fame of Southern California rather handsomely.

Col. Bailey is an Australian, and an authority on aboriginal life in that continent; J. Calvin Brown practices at the bar of the Supreme Court. It is interesting to note that although, in the recent court action, Judge Hanby gave them the right to retain the title of "Adventurers' Club," they have preferred to give themselves a new title. Besides the Pasadena office, others are to be established in Los Angeles, Hollywood and San Francisco.

Mrs. Alfred Stead, who assisted Sir Oliver Lodge in writing his book, "The Invisible Wall," quotes Sir Oliver as saying:

"It is not so astounding that we live after death as that we live through life."

Mrs. Stead is still an interested investigator and by no means an ardent convert to spiritualism. In fact, her leanings are rather to the occult as distinct from concentrating on communication with the dead. She feels that we must know much more about occultism before we can make these personal experiments safely.

Elaine Stead, the older daughter, was utterly enchanted with the Hollywood Bowl and has written quite an inspired poem on the subject.

The Steads are here strictly for a holiday, as guests of their friend Mrs. Bowman. They don't want to give lectures or get into the movies or anything.

Estelle Taylor and Jack Dempsey gave a party on the night of the election. It was a baby shower for Dorothy Calhoun, screen writer, whose other children are 14 and 18, respectively. Jack took care of the men guests, while the girls oo-ed and ah-ed as Dorothy opened her gorgeous gifts for the coming little stranger. All of us women writers who have babies were green with envy. Somehow we missed out on these fancy showers. Dorothy should really have triplets in order to use all the gifts.

There was something unusual about having the men at an affair of the kind. Prof. Calhoun, the proud husband, was at once triumphant and embarrassed. He is a professor at U.C.L.A.

Everything was carried out appropriately. The table napkins were folded slyly and pinned with a safety pin. The drinks were served in baby bottles, and the ice-cream was a perfect model of a baby in a cradle. But all the while the election returns were coming through on the radio, often with amusing effect, for we would stop oo-ing about covey-dovey babies and made coarse remarks about candidates.

So Daisy Bannerman Coates, former president of the Euterpe Opera Club, is putting out another who's who, to be known as "California Women of Prominence." In sending out her forms, one notes they are rubber-stamped with "Purchase of Book Not Obligatory," which is quite an innovation. It is, however, to cost $20, with $5 for engraving a photograph. Daisy says she is worried because, out of 5300 names in "Who's Who in California" only 162 are women!

"What a commentary on their public-mindedness," says Daisy, "with 50,000 women in club life alone, to say nothing of the remaining thousands."

Yes, Daisy, I know. But 50,000 club women does not mean 50,000 women of prominence, nay, nay. I would put half a dozen of "women of prominence" to each club as a liberal estimate. It's those "remaining thousands" that are likely to prove really interesting—the countless numbers who are running big businesses adorning great professions, running ranches, flower market gardens, hospitals, institutions; who are putting up new great buildings, who are writing books, composing music, painting fine pictures, and who mostly haven't any time left for joining clubs. My pet objection to the notorious Who's Who of the kind that have been published locally is that, unless the ladies belonged to a club they were unlikely to be in it. As this other kind of woman is more often legitimate news, these books were not very helpful on information about them, when I needed to make a hurried reference.

Here's luck to you, Daisy, and we shall all be grateful if your book proves to have taken an interest in those other "thousands."

Fortune tellers have a great time in Hollywood. Most of the acting profession are very superstitious and stand ready to pay generously for hints on the future, preferably hints of coming triumphs, of course.

Mary Pickford, Lilyan Tashman, Louise Fazenda are three very different types who admit buying peeps into the future. Louise has just been told that 1940 will be a professionally triumphant year for her and so is impatient to tack another ten years on her age!

A famous brain specialist has been told his future lies on the stage, so now he is blithely waiting to wipe out all his experience as a celebrated surgeon and take to the footlights.

The nicer fortune-tellers invariably tell one that one's private yearns are to come to pass. It is only afterward that we hear how they foresaw certain tragedies, but hated to depress the client.

Here's one of Patience Worth's swift retorts to a word tossed her at a meeting. Some one shouted "Politics." Quick as thought she flashed:

"Man moutheth and chooseth,
And when he chooseth,
Sendeth but a fool to the mart."

Pearl Curran Rogers, insists that the spirit of Patience Worth, and not herself, sends these quips and epigrams. Here's one for "Conscience:"

"That lash which all men dread.
And all men suffer,
And all men cheat."

She can go on like that almost indefinitely, apparently not waiting to think. It's like touching a button and the light coming on.

I must positively see that Mrs. Alfred Stead and Mrs. Pearl Rogers meet.

WALTHALL GETS NEW ROLE

Henry B. Walthall has "come down from the mountains" and has said adieu to fishing, hunting and the outdoor life for the new screen season. His three hundred and forty-first picture role is to be that of Hatburn in Columbia's special production of "Tol'able David."

'Madam Satan' to be Released at Early Date

The approaching release of Cecil B. De Mille's "Madam Satan" draws attention at this time to the latest effort of the pioneer producer-director.

After his excursion into coal mines and sociological problems in "Dynamite," De Mille is said, with "Madam Satan," to have returned to the "glitter and glory" of such early successes as "Old Wives for New," "Don't Change Your Husbands," "Why Change Your Wife?" etc.

"Madam Satan," written by Jeanie Macpherson, is described as a marital comedy of high society. De Mille, however, modernizes the ultrargorgeous swimming pools and bedrooms of his earlier pictures. His ocular piece de resistance in the new M.-G.-M. production is a masked ball aboard a Zeppelin, ending in a mid-air accident which forces the passengers to drop from the craft in parachutes.

The burden of the story is carried by four principals: Kay Johnson, Reginald Denny, Roland Young and Lillian Roth.

Seattle Girl to Play First Picture Role

Constance Cummings, 20-year-old Seattle girl, who never before has appeared in a motion picture, was recently selected by Samuel Goldwyn as the feminine lead in Ronald Colman's new starring picture written directly for the screen by Frederick Lonsdale.

Miss Cummings is a blond with blue eyes and is five feet three inches tall. She was educated at Coronado and got her first stage experience in the Coronado High School.

On graduation, Miss Cummings played two small bits with the Savoy Players in San Diego and then went to New York. After appearing in the chorus of several productions, she understudied Linda Watkins in "June Moon." During an illness of the star, she played the role in several performances and was thus brought to the attention of Mr. Goldwyn. A screen test resulted and the actress was brought to Hollywood.

Film Star's Career Helped by Cameraman

Had it not been for a photographer, who persistently declared she had screen possibilities, Mary Astor might never have become a motion-picture actress. The sophisticated girl of "Holiday" declares that it was through his efforts alone that she finally landed a position in her present profession.

"I went to him for some pictures," says Miss Astor, "and they turned out beautifully. He told me I should be in pictures and promised to help me become an actress. One of the photographs was sent to a film publication and won second honors, although it did not bring me a screen role.

"Later on he sent me to Lillian Gish, who encouraged me. She introduced me to D. W. Griffith, who gave me my first screen test and afterward was instrumental in having me sign with Paramount."

Ancient Props Arriving Here for 'Cimarron'

Some idea of the cultural and economic life of the 80's in Oklahoma is graphically reflected in the "props" now arriving in Hollywood by the carload for use in R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures' "Cimarron."

Of chief interest are 1000 assorted vehicles—relics of the "pre-horseless-carriage era"—surreys, buggies, hacks, buckboards, victorias, phaetons, covered farm wagons, tallyhoes, dog carts and bull carts.

The evolution of the printing art is seen in the Washington, Clam Jaw, Gordon and Oly hand and job presses; the first linotype machine and other obsolete accessories of the "fourth estate."

Other "props" include two narrow gauge street cars and seventeen early types of automobiles.

Evolution of Printing Shop Seen in Film

The evolution of the printing art from the make-shift shop of 1889 to the modern and efficient plant of 1930 will be graphically portrayed in Edna Ferber's "Cimarron," now being filmed by R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures.

To provide contrast between the primitive material and the equipment of today, a metropolitan newspaper plant of 1930 will be shown in operation.

"Cimarron," adapted from the Ferber novel by Howard Estabrook, is being directed by Wesley Ruggles, with Dix heading an all-star cast.

Actor Returns to Fox Studio

Joseph Cawthorn is back at the Fox studios, the scene of his first screen work, and is making his first talking picture for this organization with his appearance in "The Princess and the Plumber."

The veteran actor who is playing the older plumber and using his famous German dialect, first faced the cameras in "Secret Studio" with Olive Borden and did a number of other pictures for Fox.

Cawthorn is under contract to Radio Pictures and is loaned for the one picture. There are plans to star him in a picture that bears the tentative title of "The Accordion Man."

"Twenty-Toos"---and $15 New Suits, Sizes 12 to 20

There is no doubt about it. It is a "Twenty-Too" season in boys' trousers. Every boy who comes into Bullock's now wants to practically measure the cuff to be sure he is getting a "Twenty-Too." (A precaution, by the way, which is quite unnecessary, for all Bullock's boys' suits are now made with "Twenty-Too's.")

But these new suits are worth investigating for other qualities . . . traced waistline coats, twin pleats in the trousers, materials like rough English-looking tweeds flecked with color (also herringbones and cassimeres,) and the new Fall colors of copper brown and taupe gray. Qualities which Bullock's was able to secure to sell at a $15 price in keeping with the value policy of this September through the combined buying of 20 great stores! Sizes 12 to 20.

Jersey Suits, Plain And Striped $3.85

The English very wisely dress boys between the ages of 3 and 8 in straight little jumper blouses and short trousers of jersey. Jersey that gives to the stretching and pulling of playground play without disaster to seams! Jersey that cleans so easily of all kinds of spots!

Like the suits Bullock's is pricing at $3.85 for this September of outstanding values. Some in plain colors, others with round-and-round striped blouses. Sizes 3 to 8.

Sweaters For The Careless Age $2.45

The way of a boy with a sweater is to drop it down wherever he plays and pick it up some time later! Which makes this September value offer of Bullock's welcome to all parents of boys between the ages of 3 and 8.

At $2.45—firm-knit pull-overs that will stand the strain of football practice play. Blue—Brown—Green—and Red with contrasting bands. All with "V" necks. Sizes 24 to 30.

TRENCH LIFE DEPICTED IN WAR FILM

Audiences See Horrors of Legalized Slaughter in "Western Front"

Louis Wolheim, the immortal "Kat" of "All Quiet on the Western Front," now at the Criterion Theater, has some views of his own regarding Eric Remarque's famous story.

"Here is the first film," Wolheim points out, "that plants the audience firmly in the first-line trenches and allows it to see and feel war as it really is, to understand vividly the stupidity of it, its murderous worthlessness and the criminal, predatory and ruthless instinct that inspires it.

"Audiences like it because it lifts them from their theater seats and takes them over the top, into the hell of a fierce attack . . . safely.

"Here is a picture that will do more to arouse the indignation of the world against blood-thirsty war lords than all the sermons on peace that have ever been given. And there are no sugary Hollywood touches in it. There is no vo-de-o-do or boop-a-doop."

Veiller Joins Writing Staff

Anthony Veiller, son of Bayard Veiller, the playwright, has joined the writing staff of the R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures' studio.

This is young Veiller's first screen work. He is the author of a stage play, "Defense," opening in New York this fall.

Junior Durkin Gets Role in "Trail" Film

Six years ago, a 12-year-old youngster chewed licorice and spat it for tobacco as he strummed on a banjo in the screen's first western epic. The boy was Johnny Fox and his work in "The Covered Wagon" made him one of the screen's most talked-of child players.

Today, another 12-year-older faces the same opportunities presented Johnny Fox. He is Junior Durkin, stage child actor, who has an important boy role in Paramount's production, "The Santa Fe Trail."

Junior isn't a tobacco-chewing youth, nor does he play a banjo in "The Santa Fe Trail," but not in the intervening six years has there been so important a child role in a western production, it is stated.

Students Sing in Bay City

In addition to Los Angeles engagements, students from the Guido Caselotti Studio are singing in San Francisco. They are Genevieve Wirkus, contralto, who is now singing in the prologue to the talking version of "The Birth of a Nation;" Louise Caselotti, mezzo soprano, who has just finished a personal appearance at the Tivoli Theater, Florence Astell, soprano, who has just finished an engagement at the Fox Theater in Fanchon and Marco's idea presentation there, and Robert Sellon, bass, who has been engaged to appear in two operatic roles with the San Francisco Grand Opera Company consisting of the role of "Happy" in "The Girl of the Golden West," singing with Gigli and Jeritza, and the part of a "Capadocian" in "Salome."

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

Oh, let's honor the spectacle to be presented in the downtown district the coming week! Let us go forth clad in our best habiliments, prepared to thus express appreciation of the beauty assembled for our delectation.

Fortunes are to be expended in artistic settings and decorations in the stores, equally great amounts lavished upon street lighting in marvelous effects; so let us prove that we realize the value of those efforts. Let us attest our interest by our presence and by clothing ourselves in a manner to prove ourselves worthy of the efforts put forth in our behalf. We know our stores to be as fine as those of any city; let us not be niggardly of praise!

For the Bride

In giving the shower for the autumn bride, table linens should not be overlooked, for they are especially interesting and beautiful this season.

In addition to those of snowy whiteness, in damasks of flowerful designs, there are those in scarf shape, for the refectory table, now so popular, and where color plays so dramatic a part. Some, recently introduced, have centers in pastel-toned linen, are edged with lace and the lace given the wanted touch of color by means of appliqué, the center linen being used to embolden the larger flowers of the lace pattern. Such sets, consisting of the long refectory scarf and napery to match, are truly luxurious as well as new.

Day Beds Adorable

The new day beds are jewel-like in both wood and finish. Many are used as distinctly separate, or "occasional" pieces, not matching the remainder of the furnishing, but differing in color as in design.

Reminiscent of those historic French periods, when the socially elect met at twilight to discuss the latest book, or to pass upon an original literary essay, these day beds are really more on the order of sofas than actual beds. Lacquered and possessed of gracious curved, the frames incline downy mattresses and "slumber" robes of silk, satin and, in the latest development, of velvet. Innumerable cushions serve to lend still further luxury.

Sumptuous Pajamas

It is for lounging in just such handsomely appointed day beds, doubtless, that the new pajamas fashioned from velvets have been designed by Mme. La Mode. "Leisure" garments is the new and definitive name for garments of this order. This garment, with its clever hint of the mannish, vies with the wholly feminine negligee—beribboned, bellowered, belaced, for wear during those intimate hours loved of girls and women when the tea-cup and a bit of chat serve to enliven the interval between shopping and the dinner hour.

Knitties

Scarfs and berets, crocheted from yarn in pastel tints, are a presentation of the new season, in a leading store where everything is authentic in mode. Wheels in a bold design offset the ends of the scarfs, which is worn stock-fashion and which is overlapped directly beneath the wearer's chin.

Crowns of the berets receive an accompanying touch of the color employed in the scarf ends, which usually are in contrast to the remainder of the tie.

Fine Woods

Finest of woods find their way into the furniture of the present time. Not only such woods as mahogany, maple, walnut and those others of precious grain are used, but old-time favorites are receiving novel treatments, such as bleaching to a heretofore unthought-of tone—scraping and waxing to lend a sort of patina; these effects are shown in many of the newest furniture productions.

Made Here

It may surprise you to know that some of the finest furniture made anywhere is produced by our own Los Angeles manufacturers.

Had you dreamed that we have here about 150 manufacturers of furniture?

Wake up and when redoing your home, ask for Los Angeles furniture. You will be amazed to discover that the best offerings are of home creation; for in this, as in many other arts and crafts, our dear Southland inspires originality and beauty.

Italian Wares

New examples in Italian pottery are being shown in several of the larger stores, notably some especially designed for garden use—adorable blues and creamy yellows which exercise so instant an appeal. With our Southern California architecture, these potteries from Southern Europe are especially appropriate.

Flowers Bloom

Flowers are beginning to blossom on hats; sparingly, it must be said, but that they are there at all is an innovation after a long absence from millinery.

Noticeable was a beret—in modified shape—fashioned from white velvet, in all-over shirring, with "ears" at either side; and posed at the back a white gardenia with petals in shellac. The effect was good and aroused hope for a revival of flowers for hat ornamentation, to those who always have liked this mode.

Handkerchief Modes

With darker colors prevailing in the autumn modes for dress, handkerchiefs are taking on darker tones also. Many dark browns and even blacks and maroons are shown in block prints, the black design used as a deep bordering and extending well into the center of the kerchief. The more elaborate numbers have embroidered designs or flowers added to the block-printed borders.

PLEA SENT FOR OLD HORSE CAR

Efforts to Locate Equine-Powered Transportation for Film Unavailing

"My kingdom for a narrow-gauge street car—vintage of 1905!"

That is the plea of Wesley Ruggles, who is preparing to direct "Cimarron" starring Richard Dix, for R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures.

He must have two for use in a scene depicting the town of Osage, Okla., constructed at the R.-K.-O. ranch for scenes in the Edna Ferber story. Only one car has been found in Los Angeles, property of the Pacific Electric Company.

HOLLYWOOD IN PERSON

BY MOLLIE MERRICK

IF "ROMANCE" struck you as not being the type for Greta Garbo, the story of Mata Hari, the famous temple dancer and spy who was executed by the French government during the war, ought certainly to give Garbo material suitable to her.

Mata Hari was Javanese and Dutch. The inflection will fit in with the Garbo mode of speech. And the impenetrable mystery of Mata Hari, never successfully solved, matches some of that in the Scandanavian beauty of Garbo.

Brown Directs Tibbett

Clarence Brown, vital director of serious films, will be at the helm when Lawrence Tibbett's next picture, "The Southerner," gets on its way. Here should be a combination.

Motion pictures have in Tibbett perhaps the only Metropolitan Opera star to whom the Theater Guild has made overtures. His acting ability has been so widely recognized that singing is only one of his other assets.

Salaries Change

The new salary scale is pretty well established in Hollywood these days, I am told. When talkies first started there was pandemonium—of necessity. Silent stars who were receiving huge salaries found themselves unwilling to cut their prices. Yet they could not compete in the new art with the best-trained voices of the stage.

Irene Rich told me she asked $3500 for a role which a Broadway star wanted at $400. Those were difficult times and there has been a long struggle to adjust values. The silent star has lost out somewhat, but the salary list has settled into less than in the days of pantomime.

Production at Low Ebb

Production is at a low tempo in Hollywood. Lay-offs and suspended production are the order of the day. Several of the largest studios have cut staffs to the barest minimum.

There is a rumor that this condition will prevail until Charlie Chaplin's picture, "City Lights," is released. This is to be a silent with sound effects only. If it goes over, it is said that a portion of the future films will be made on this pattern.

Musical Pictures Wanted

I have received numerous letters of late correcting the prevalent impression among producers that the public is tired of musical pictures.

The writers, and they come from almost every State in the Union, assure me they are not tired of musicals. Far from it! But they are weary of the sort of musical matter they have been receiving at the hands of Hollywood.

They like good recordings of good voices. They like good songs well presented, but they resent interference in the progress of a story by the director's introduction of a song at a moment when it is nothing more than an irritating deviation from the trend of the theme.

JOE COOK RETURNS TO LOS ANGELES IN FILM

Joe Cook is one of New York's leading comedy stars today—not only on the stage, but also on the screen, since his picture is now playing at the Globe Theater there. It is twelve years since he appeared in Los Angeles, and "Rain or Shine" is his first screen venture. Consequently, it is altogether fitting and proper to reintroduce Joe Cook to Los Angeles.

Cook's first talkie opened here at the Orpheum Theater Friday. It is "Rain or Shine," directed by Frank Capra, with a cast including Louise Fazenda, William Collier, Jr., and Joan Peers, as well as Tom Howard and David Chasen, who have been assisting Cook on the stage for years.

Perhaps this introduction can best be made by one of New York's columnists:

Things about Joe Cook that even the four Hawaiians don't know. When he knocks wood he touches his head. He was born in Chicago, March 29, 1890. His real name was Joseph Lopez. His father was an artist and Spanish—his mother, Irish. He was the second white man to play the ukulele. He wears a $275 wrist watch, but never winds it. Can often be found in a shooting gallery pecking away at the clay pipes. He has worn out forty-one pairs of roller skates; seventeen bicycles, two motorcycles, eight automobiles and four motor boats.

He is married to a nonprofessional, Helen. They have four children, Joseph, 15; Jo-Jo, 14; Doris, 10; Leo, 4. Josephine and Jo-Jo were named after him; Leo is named after his brother. He is still trying to find out after whom Doris is named.

When he first came to New York he was afraid to wander a block from his home. His nickname is "Yussel."

He owns twelve pairs of silk pajamas. He sleeps in cotton pajamas.

Cook made his first professional appearance here on the old American roof. Got the job by showing an agent a photograph of himself juggling twelve balls. The agent looked at the picture and exclaimed: "Anybody who can do that is a wonder." The string holding the balls had been erased from the negative.

He is quite an artist at short-changing.

Cook lives at Lake Hopatcong. He drives home every night when he's playing in town. Has many trick contraptions about house. The big laugh is the golf course. Every player makes a hole in one. The ground is laid out so that it slopes toward the hole. You can't miss it.

One thing he can't stand is the type of fellow who says "tummy" for stomach and "hanky" for handkerchief.

Tries out all his new material before his kids. Jo-Jo is a tough audience.

He has only one servant at his country home. This servant is butler, cook, chauffeur, etc. The servant has a different name and uniform for each job. When Cook throws a party he gets some of his actor friends and a midget to assist this servant.

The comedian vows that after his first flop show he's going to retire.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

Foster Curry, manager of Camp Baldy, reports that the dining-room of that resort, which has been under the management of C. E. Zbinden for the past three months, has been taken over by the Curry interests. Mr. Zbinden is leaving Camp Baldy to take up other interests in Los Angeles.

The dining-room has been made into an attractive place with the addition of chairs, tables, dishes, light fixtures and other furnishings recently bought from the Parkridge Country Club at Corona.

A large crowd of guests were visitors at Oakglen Lodge over Labor Day. All were enthusiastic in their praise for the delightful program of entertainment which they enjoyed.

The beautiful mountain retreat at Forest Home has been exceedingly popular during the warm weather as a place to rest. For the more active there are many mountain trails for hiking, fishing along delightful Mill Creek, and the usual games at the resort center. Miniature golf proves even more popular in its natural setting at Forest Home, where mountain granite and tree hazards have been used in the making of the course.

Delights of the late summer are being enjoyed at Warner Hot Spring, as the crowds start deserting the beaches and trek for the mountains. Fifty per cent of the visitors at the famous San Diego county resort last week were from Los Angeles and vicinity.

Tamarack Lodge will remain open through September. The Mammoth Lake section attracts many deer hunters each season, and weather conditions during most of September appeal to tourists who can arrange late vacations.

Change in management and ownership of the Hotel Benjamin Franklin at San Mateo was announced recently by Maurice C. Jones, manager.

The hotel is known as one of the fashionable resorts of the San Francisco peninsula, and offers golf, tennis, swimming and polo.

Among the Los Angeles people who are enjoying vacations at the seashore the following are staying at the Hotel Virginia, Long Beach: E. J. Cuther, W. C. Hubbard, Mrs. George E. Marshall, Mrs. Walter H. McConnel, Mrs. J. P. Gordon, Mrs. Earl R. Hilbert, Mr. and Mrs. H. McConb, Mr. and Mrs. L. McCracken, Mr. H. McConb, Miss B. M. Gray, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Roberts, Mrs. Francis Clurde, Mrs. Margaret Sevandt, Mrs. Minnie McNeil and Miss Wilma McNeil.

Warner Program for 1930 Nears Fulfillment

With only nine more pictures to make to complete the 1930-1931 season's program, Warner Brothers are on the last lap of the current production schedule.

Thirty-five pictures are included in this list, with twenty-two finished, four now filming, and the remaining nine all ready for casting.

The nine that are to be made to complete the year's schedule are "Adam and Evening," "Both Were Young," "God's Gift to Women," "Red Hot Sinners," "A Husband's Privileges," "Bad Women," "The Idol," "Maytime" and a new John Barrymore comedy.

The four companies now at work include "Illicit," with Barbara Stanwyck and James Rennie; "Ex-Mistress," with Bebe Daniels and Ben Lyon; "Children of Dreams," the second Romberg-Hammerstein feature, and "Fifty Million Frenchmen," an elaborated version of the stage extravaganza of the same name.

Former Stage Stars in Film

Five former stage stars have important parts in R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures' drama, "Losing Game." They are Lowell Sherman, who is featured; George Marion, Robert McWade, William Janney and Helene Millarde.

UNIVERSAL WILL BEGIN FOUR FILMS

Quartet of Pictures to Start on Production Next Month

With five productions scheduled to reach completion the last week of this month Universal studios will put four new pictures into work during September, Carl Laemmle, Jr., has announced.

John M. Stahl has finished filming "A Lady Surrenders" with Conrad Nagel, Genevieve Tobin, Basil Rathbone and Rose Hobart. The screen adaptation of John Erskine's modern novel, "Sincerity," is now in the editing room.

Monta Bell has finished "East Is West" with Lupe Velez, Lewis Ayres and Jean Hersholt.

Rupert Julian recently completed the direction of "The Cat Creeps," which features Helen Twelvetrees, Raymond Hackett, Neil Hamilton, Lilyan Tashman, Jean Hersholt, Theodore Von Eltz and Montagu Love.

William James Craft is putting the finishing touches to "See America Thirst," a fast-moving satire with Harry Langdon, Slim Summerville and Bessie Love.

Malcolm St. Clair is well into production on "The Boudoir Diplomat," which features Betty Compson, Ian Keith, Mary Duncan and Jeannette Loff.

During September Charlie Murray and George Sidney are slated to begin "Cohens and Kellys in Africa" with directorial and supporting cast assignments yet to be made. Edward Laemmle will begin direction of "Saint Johnson," the W. R. Burnett story dealing with the strength of blood ties between two brothers of decidedly different temperaments. Edwin Carewe will begin direction of "Resurrection" with John Boles and Lupe Velez, as soon as Boles returns from the leading male role in "Lilli," for which he was lent by Laemmle to Samuel Goldwyn. Tod Browning is also slated to direct Universal's elaborate production of "Dracula" during September.

Old Traditions of Filmland Now Discarded

A survey of the Paramount studios discloses that three traditions as old as the industry itself no longer are observed. One of them is obviously gone. Two disappeared more subtly.

Megaphones have been discarded. Cameramen never wear caps with the bills turned backward.

Directors do not affect knickers and sport shirts open at the throat while at work or at any other time, save on the golf links.

The modern electrical loud speaker system has replaced the megaphone as an aid in directing big, outdoor scenes. And when the action takes place on the soundproof stages at the studios, the director need not raise his voice.

The cameraman's cap, often pictured in cartoon and story, disappeared long ago. Camera experts in the old days wore caps, turned the bills to the rear, because most of their work was done out of doors and the projecting bills prevented them from putting their focusing eye close to the finder. Today a different camera design makes it easy for the cameraman to peer through his finder without placing his eye close to the instrument.

As for the third vanished tradition, few directors ever did wear knickers in the best Boy Scout manner for their work.

Dual Role to be Finished

Dorothy Christy completes her dual role shortly. By night she has been seen as the gorgeous creature in "Body and Soul" at Tiffany's. By day she has been a demure widow at Pathe in "Lookin' for Trouble."

Miss Christy only made her film debut recently in "So This Is London" and has been on the stage a mere two years. When "The Playboy of Paris" is flashed before the public, she will be seen as the French cocotte with Maurice Chevalier.

Opera to be Interpreted

"La Boheme," the opening number of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, will be interpreted by Dr. Bruce G. Kingsley at Bullock's Wednesday at 10:30 a.m.

Merle Armitage, manager of the grand opera association, will open the series with a short resume of the stars appearing this season.

Dr. Kingsley's interpretations are well known to Los Angeles music lovers. This is his fourth season interpreting operatic and symphonic music at Bullock's.

THESE SALMON ARE ACROBATS

Ladder-Climbing Fish Will Be Seen in "Silver Horde," Story of Alaska

Pet goldfish are numerous and seals are trained to furnish stage entertainment, but more novel than either are fish that climb ladders.

They are being introduced to the public in "The Silver Horde," R.-K.-O. Radio Pictures' epic of the salmon industry.

The salmon are shown climbing man-made ladders over high falls of Alaskan dams. The ladders are erected by fishermen to keep their prey from becoming injured by leaping too high on their trips to spawning grounds.

AMERICAN OPERA STAR WINS BY SENSE OF SONG

A "sense of song," or innate ability to instinctively fathom the musical meaning of a composer, is the attribute that has made Grace Moore, American opera star, one of the greatest singers of today.

So says Herbert Stothart, American comic-opera composer who wrote "The Rogue Song" and other recent music of the screen.

Stothart is now at work with the singer again, as he is writing incidental music in "New Moon," in which Lawrence Tibbett and Miss Moore are being costarred at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

"MONTE CARLO" WELL RECEIVED

ater, that of the now too-familiar haw-hawing Englishman, though there may be subtleties of differentiation known only to the respective actors. The fact remains that such strongly typed players disappear quickest from the screen because they cease soonest to be amusing.

"Let's Go Native," its release for some reason delayed, suffers from being a throwback to the now vanished vogue of musical comedy on the screen, when a chorus emerges from somewhere to execute a precision dance on the deck of a ship and the principals every now and then break into song for no reason at all.

MERIT IN SPOTS

However, the picture in question is a curiously uneven admixture of inspired comedy and utter dullness. It has much of the same quality that gave "Dangerous Nan McGrew" the rating of one of the worst pictures of the year even though it had merit in spots. It is interesting to note, however, that Jack Oakie succeeds in running away with the film, though it was made long before he achieved stardom, and that Jeanette MacDonald gives evidence of that flair for comedy which makes her much more effective in "Monte Carlo" than she was in "The Vagabond King."

Despite the reaction of critical minds to the picture, the fact remains that it is causing much audible merriment among the paying guests at the Paramount.

Mary Nolan, who has never yet appeared in what might be called an important picture, succeeds again in giving a performance far more brilliant than is usually seen in film epics. It occurs in "Outside the Law" at the Globe Theater, and virtually every reviewer has hailed her as a bona fide star who apparently is fated never to come into her full meed of glory.

Miss Nolan's beauty evokes just as much admiration as her acting, and she is further applauded for being unconscious of either. Though Miss Nolan's characterization in the new picture is rather too hard-boiled for entire credibility, she invests the role of the crook once played by Priscilla Dean with sympathy as honest as it is easily gained. Edward G. Robinson and Owen Moore are considered good, too, and so is the refurbishing supplied by Tod Browning, but the fact remains that "Outside the Law" is tolerably familiar by now and the many similar plots that have followed it show up in rather unflattering relief this antique.

The Four Marx brothers in "Animal Crackers" are rated a hit at the Rialto and "Top Speed" at the Strand isn't.

GRIFFITH "HIMSELF AGAIN"

"Abraham Lincoln" opened at the Central Theater Monday night and roused the audience not only to frequent applause but cheers. It justifies every advance report of D. W. Griffith's return to form and with one magnificent gesture erases all memory of "Drums of Love" and "The Battle of the Sexes." The "old master" is himself again. Simplicity, directness, humanness and poetic imagination characterize the work, with that shrewd sense of dramatic values which Mr. Griffith never has lost even when his viewpoint has been temporarily obscured.

The assassination of Lincoln is staged with superb restraint, in which, however, there is no lack of suspense and climax. Whatever acclaim the picture has enjoyed, and there is a deal of it, enthusiasm centers on Walter Huston for his tremendous aid in making Lincoln a living figure who is a poignantly human being before he is a hero or circumstances make him a martyr. Never self-conscious of the task at hand, Mr. Huston easily established himself as one of the great actors of the screen, and he has adapted himself to the technique of motion pictures with such success that he never suggests the artist who has acquired his skill on the stage. Though the picture is, of course, episodic, Mr. Huston accomplishes Lincoln's various transitions with such subtle ease that the spectator is rarely conscious of not having followed the character day by day, year by year.

UNA MERKEL LAUDED

Mr. Griffith's entire cast shows the same inspiration as his choice of Mr. Huston for the title role. Una Merkel is praised for her poignant charm, though at times the microphone seizes upon a note in her voice and holds it unpleasantly with a defect that no doubt can be remedied in her future appearances. Kay Hammond is considered splendid throughout the picture, not the least of her effectiveness coming from her adaptability to her costumes and her scene of irritability on the occasion of Lincoln's non-appearance for the wedding brought forth a prolonged burst of applause. Ian Keith surpasses any performance he has previously given and next to Miss Merkel and Miss Hammond has captured most attention, though every member of the cast is considered perfect.

TIN-PAN ALLEY STILL WOBBLY

the screen, and so a new set-up entirely is being sought in the later productions.

Jerome Kern, who has written "The Man in the Sky," declares his belief that the music must be preeminently atmospheric in the motion picture. It must be suggested by environment, and it must pervade the film as a whole. "There is nothing worse to my mind than introducing just a single song, or two songs in a picture," he said. "The chances are that the musical number will seem utterly forced in a case like this. It is a far greater mistake to restrict the music in an obvious way than to make the musical impression full and complete. But when it is full and complete, it must be an embellishment rather than the main and significant thing. The story should at all times come first."

NATURALNESS STRESSED

In "The Man in the Sky," Kern, with Otto Harbach, his librettist, has attempted to suggest a musical inspiration at various stages. It may be in the nature of a cafe orchestra, a marching band, or some other combination of musical instruments. The people are placed in a situation where it would seem natural for them to sing.

Kern, of course, wrote the music for the stage version of "Show Boat," including the famous "Old Man River," and he is a conscientious student of picture technique.

Much the same views as his are entertained by Sigmund Romberg, the composer of "The Desert Song," "Blossom Time" and "New Moon." With Oscar Hammerstein II he is working on the musical film, "Children of Dreams," which has its initial setting in California, and later is transferred to Europe, and then to the Metropolitan Operahouse in New York. Gypsylike folk who pick the fruit in the California orchards are first portrayed, and because of their romantic and nomadic lives it seems logical that music should be their main enjoyment. Songs are introduced during their work and during their recreational hours.

One of the most remarkable features of this production is the apple orchard setting, which was constructed on the stage at the studio. This was built in full detail even to the apples on the trees. The apples themselves were real, but fastened to the artificial branches, and the branches themselves were attached to dead trees. The apple orchard setting occupied one of the largest stages at the studio, completely filling it.

Romberg has evinced the keenest interest in picture making. He is constantly on the set during the filming of the production and watches all details of the music. Hammerstein is also giving a thorough study to production methods, and their combined efforts are being fashioned along highly pictorial lines.

Encouragement by the supporters of screen music is also derived from the fact that Lawrence Tibbett is making two pictures during his stay in California. The first is "New Moon," much adapted from the original, and with a Russian setting, and a second feature with a southern locale. In both of these Tibbett will have some important song numbers. Grace Moore is opposite him in "New Moon" and also stars in "Jenny Lind," but only to permit the star to go ahead with "New Moon," as this has to be early completed, on account of Tibbett's concert engagements.

FUTURE MUSICALS

In all, there will be about thirty to forty pictures released this season in which music will figure. Among the more important are "Monte Carlo," "The Lottery Bride," "The Hot Heiress," "Whoopee," "Leatherneckings," "Reaching for the Moon," "March of Time," "Playboy of Paris," "Sea Legs," "Sunny," "Fifty Million Frenchmen," "Just Imagine," "Stolen Thunder," "Tonight and You," besides the one already mentioned. Stars singing in them will include Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald, Jack Buchanan, Robert Chisholm, Bebe Daniels, Ona Munson, Irene Dunne, Jack Oakie, Marilyn Miller, Maureen O'Sullivan, J. Harold Murray, Paul Gregory, Margaret Shilling, Irene Delroy, and various others.

Very few of the pictures are admitted to be out-and-out musicals. The producers still live in trepidation regarding these attractions, and the fate of the musical film for some time to come will hang in the balance.

Child Actresses in 'Trail' Film

Two child actresses play the leading feminine roles in "Santa Fe Trail," Paramount's filmization of Hal G. Evarts's "Spanish Acres." However, one of the misses places an "ex" before her title "child actress." The players are Rosita Moreno, appearing opposite Richard Arlen, and Mitzi Green, who carries the juvenile interest of the picture with Junior Durkin. Mitzi is still a child actress. At 9, she is enjoying the popularity on the American screen that Rosita held on the South American dancing stage at the same age. Being an interpreter of the difficult Castilian dances, Miss Moreno's debut as a child favorite was delayed a couple of years past that of Mitzi. However, their careers are said to be parallel.

Miss Landis to Have Role in 'Typhoon Bill'

Jessie Royce Landis, young stage actress known as a star in Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Denver, Boston, Rochester and New York, has been signed by Paramount for the lead opposite George Bancroft in his next picture, "Typhoon Bill."

Miss Landis is a Chicago girl. Her first Broadway appearance was in Adolph Klauber's production, "Wings of Chance," following which she played with the Bonstelle Players in Detroit, with Otis Skinner on tour in "The Honor of the Family," with Laurette Taylor in two productions, with Ian Keith in "The Command Performance," in "Stripped," with Lionel Atwall, and most recently, with Richard Bennett in his new play "Solid South."

Sloane Enjoys Trip Abroad

Paul Sloane has departed for New York en route to Europe on the Bremen—his first vacation in eleven active years in the motion-picture studios. The Radio Pictures, director, having extended his contract with R.-K.-O., will be abroad for nearly four months, visiting England, France, Germany, Austria, Hungary and Italy. He will visit writers and producers.

CHORINES A LA VOLUBLE CINEMA

You May Think You Know Your Chorus Girls, But You Haven't Met the Broadway Hoofer on Hollywood Soil; Her Beauty Now Sunkissed, Too!

They pay them $40 a week while rehearsing and $75 a week while working in a picture.

That is practically the standard rate for high-class chorus girls, imported, for the most part, from Broadway, who are now working in motion pictures.

But—they rise at 8, rehearsing mornings, and at 6 or 7—yes, it is a.m.!—working mornings. Can such things be? But remember that Dorothy Mackaill, ex-Follies queen, is doing it, too. Perhaps watching her sort of inspires them.

A LONG STORY

How does the movie chorus girl differ from her Broadway ilk?

Well, that's a long story. But there may be brief, illuminating side lights, which in a few words give the picture to the sophisticated and the imaginative.

A Vitaphone chorus girl at First National-Vitaphone studios the other day was heard to insist on paying for her own lunch. She called the cameraman she was lunching with "honey," too.

Perhaps they're catching the woman's-right-to-pay spirit from the Mackaills, the Alice Whites and so on of cinemaland. Perhaps they envy some stars the privilege of buying cute little gigolo husbands, princes or marquises or dukes of little starving kingdoms.

"What a thrill to help your husband support his starving Armenian kingdom!" remarked "Sugar" Geiss enviously.

SOME HITCH-HIKE

Of course, some of the chorines hitch-hike to the Burbank studio, which lies five miles across the Hollywood hills from the shopping center of the film capital.

Others seem to have almost the same young men bringing them to work each morning.

Others drive their own little cars or medium cars, mostly open, snappy roadsters. Of course, they may not be the registered owners, but they have the keys and park them in the fox-tail covered fields around the big San Fernando Valley studio.

(Yes, it's the same place where old monks used to grind olive oil; five miles away, airline, is San Fernando Mission, and El Camino Real is the highway the chorines roll back and forth on, as once the old monks plodded afoot.)

Then there are the chorines who step from the limousines, and tell James what time they're likely to need the car that evening, or whether or not he is to call for them at lunch time.

All on the working-rehearsing ratio between $45 and $75 per week? Well—as one of the girls put it:

"You know, it costs so much less to live in California."

Familiar words with a new meaning. As a movie cowpuncher put it:

RANGE EATEN OFF

"I thought they was so many beautiful gals here in Hollywood in the extra game that the range was all eaten off as though sheep had been pastured on it. Seems as I didn't know my New York chorus gals!"

Then there's the little girl with the earnest little music-composer-husband and their cute little boy-baby, seven months old. The husband and the baby are her "movie-stage-door Johnnies."

Didn't think that was true outside of fiction, did you?

Don't gather from this little domestic romance that the girls are old. The First National-Vitaphone chorus of twenty-four, which is the standard for most research because they are the highest class of the transplanted talent, averages 19 years of age. The oldest girl is 23 and the youngest is 15.

Hardly a correct impression of their ages is to be gained by the two extremes, for they are closely grouped around the average age.

It is always easy to be skeptical about their ages, but as Max Scheck, their mentor, says: "Look them over at 8 o'clock in the morning, in their practice suits with no make-up on. Then watch them dance at the end of a long day on the set, rehearsing another number. Twenty-five shows itself then. So would 50, if any movie chorus master would have a 30-year-old girl in his chorus."

That seems to be true. Like athletics, age would show in this game.

The movie chorus girls have to work much harder than the theater chorus girls, for they are rehearsing several complete sets of numbers for various pictures at the same time; they can rehearse for the director while movie histrionics go forward, often with a star dancing who doesn't know how to dance, or singing when singing isn't his or her forte. That takes time. It also takes tireless muscles.

Yet one of them spent such a day, dressed in street clothes, danced half the length of a city block on her way to her car, evidently showing her girl friend a step used that day. Others dance for no apparent reason at all. At the Montmartre, any evening, several of them may be seen dancing with their boy friends.

OFT-TOLD STORY

The movies have obtained the best chorus girls in the world. It's the old story of the invasion of the stage by Edison's mechanical marvel, bringing 1000 50-cent admissions into the coffers of the business for every ten 45 admissions.

The opulent movies can easily afford to buy the best stage talent of every sort, and when better chorus girls are born in Budapest or Vladivostok, they will be imported by producers. The world's most famous girl-shows stand as much chance against the talking film invasion as the country grocery against the chain store, and for precisely the same reason.

Nine of the twenty-four First National-Vitaphone girls are blondes. Five are red-heads. Ten are brunettes.

Their average height is 5ft. 4in., and average weight 115 pounds.

Fifteen of them had been educated for singing, dancing or drama from childhood. Of these seven attended private school.

Only one of the twenty-four girls had not finished high-school grades or their equivalent. This one had one year in high school. She is considered one of the cleverest girls in the chorus.

Three of the girls have attended special college classes.

Eight have held positions as stenographers or secretaries.

Twelve of the girls have been artists' models, while or before engaging in their dancing careers.

Only three of them have been in the movies, and two have done a bit of stage acting, before becoming film chorus girls.

Seven were trained as singers, with grand opera in prospect, but strayed off the path into the chorus.

FOUR ARE MARRIED

Four of the twenty-four are married. Eight admit being engaged. One, already mentioned, has a child.

Their five-foot literary shelf is scattered on the little folding chairs around the rehearsal room. It ranges from a little popular edition of "Thus Spake Zarathustra" and "The Silver Stallion," (both on the same chair, with the same red-leather pocketbook and tan leather coat) to the latest copy of "Snappy Stories."

Sixteen of them admitted that they would be willing to become movie actresses. The rest wanted to continue dancing—in the movies. But, of course, they wanted featured singing-and-dancing roles.

"They'll be having them, and they'll become just as important and highly paid as stars who enact plots," one girl remarked.

Agnes Riley, Sadie Campbell, Dorothy McNames, Billie Smith, Dorothy McNeill, Madelin Dorraine, Sugar Geiss, Diane Verne, Lois Smiley, Dorothy Chamberlain, Katherine Keene, Day Porter, Elsie de Vaine, Bonni Winslow, Florence McGuiz, Vivian de Vaul, Lucille Wayland, Dorraine Wilde, Lotus Dear, Fleata Crawford, Ebba Holly, Doris Toddings, Rowan Collins and Jean Severn.

The studio chorines have contracts. These are one year, with a six-month renewal clause. Chorines do not get five-year contracts.

First National-Vitaphone studios alone has this chorus of twenty-four on contract, and it is at present employing over 100 all told. The other big studios are using similar numbers. So Hollywood is overrun with them, but they're hard to tell from civilians and movie stars.

One of them was glimpsed in the "five-and-ten" the other day. She was buying an ice pick!

WASHINGTON GIRL VISITING HERE

(Daniel Sheehan photo)
Miss Eugenia Blount

After passing six months in San Francisco with her sister, Mrs. Emory Winship, Miss Eugenia Blount of Washington, D. C., will remain in Hollywood for an indefinite stay.

Miss Blount attended Miss Patricia Henry as maid of honor when she became the bride of Fred Niblo, Jr., yesterday at high noon at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Beverly Hills.

Griffith Will Go to Paris

Edward H. Griffith is beginning to wonder if the titles of his past two Ann Harding successes, "Paris Bound" and "Holiday," have not been a forecast of his future.

Announcement has been made that the Pathe director will leave soon for Paris to get authentic background for his next picture, "Rebound," in which Miss Harding will start. The journey will be a combination business and pleasure trip.

AXT AND ZEK OPEN, CLOSE

Studio Telephone Directory Contains Names of Stars and Many Others

Dr. Axt and H. Zek open and close the most novel telephone directory yet published, the direct-line guide covering some 600 telephone stations in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

This is the only telephone book in which the numbers of film stars are boldly published, the listings supplying direct lines into the dressing rooms of Wallace Beery, William Haines, John Gilbert, Lawrence Tibbett, Conrad Nagel, Ramon Novarro, Grace Moore, Joan Crawford, Marie Dressler, Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer and other players.

Dr. Axt, the book tells us, is director of synchronization, while Mr. Zek is a writer.

MONTEREY ARMY POLOISTS PLAY TODAY

Picked Southern California Four to be Met

A MILITARY atmosphere will prevail at the Uplifters' Club, Santa Monica, today when the Eleventh Cavalry United States Army polo team of Monterey meets a picked Southern California four. The game, staged and sponsored by the Los Angeles Junior Chamber of Commerce, is part of the year-round sports program of that organization.

High ranking officers of the Army and Navy who will be the guests of the Junior Chamber today are Brig.-Gen. Walter P. Story of the California National Guard; Col. H. E. Yates, United States Infantry; Col. Vaughn Cooply, United States Cavalry; Lieut.-Col. Jack Hastie, Three Hundred and Twenty-third Cavalry; Col. Perry Weidner, United States Reserve Corps; Col. W. G. Cross, president army officers' mess; Col. W. H. Neblett, Three Hundred and Forty-seventh Field Artillery; Lieut.-Col. Waller, commanding officer at Fort MacArthur, and his staff; Col. Harcourt Hervey, One Hundred and Sixtieth Infantry, California National Guard, and his staff; Col. Perry Miles, United States Army, instructor of military science and tactics at the University of California at Los Angeles; Admiral F. H. Schofield, commanding officer of the battle fleet; Vice-Admiral R. H. Leigh, commanding officer of the battleship division; Rear-Admiral H. H. Christy, commander battleship division No. 4; Rear-Admiral J. R. P. Pringle, commander of battleship division No. 3, and Rear-Admiral W. C. MacDougal, commander of the fleet base force.

Playing under the name of the Uplifters' Club, the picked Southern California team includes Lionel Pedley, captain; Will Rogers, Jr.; Hale Marsh of Santa Barbara and Dr. Harry Wilson.

Military display, polo parade and pony races are part of the featured program, which will start at 2 p.m.

Screen Writer Given Contract By Paramount

Because of his recent work on the screen plays for "The Santa Fe Trail" and "Tom Sawyer," Sam Mintz has been given a contract as a Paramount staff writer.

Although Mintz has been writing screen material for Paramount for more than five years, he had never signed a contract before. His former work for Paramount was interspersed with literary work at other studios, but his new contract will confine his talents solely to Paramount productions.

Mintz has done originals, adaptations, and screen plays, including work on "Manpower," "Rubber Heels," "The Gay Defender," "Fools for Luck," "Warming Up," "Moran of the Marines," "Avalanche," "Three Week-Ends," "Stairs of Sand," and "The Kibitzer."

LYON'S VISIT BRIEF

Ben Lyon is making one of the shortest visits to New York that any screen star has made in years. He arrived there one Thursday; appeared at the opening of Hell's Angels" and left Saturday. He is slated to start work in a new picture in Hollywood immediately.

Doris Lloyd Makes Return

Doris Lloyd, as the titled aristocrat in "The Champion" with Grant Mitchell, makes her return to the stage of the Hollywood Playhouse after an absence of many months. The role was greatly to her liking, she states, and the association with Mitchell and others of the company has aroused her enthusiasm. The actress's career has been more of the stage than the screen. Miss Lloyd's role provides both comedy and drama. As a woman of high birth and important social connections, she endeavors to plan a social conquest for a family that has recently acquired a fortune.

FLETCHER STARRED

Bramwell Fletcher, young actor recently seen here in "Raffles," was "pioneering" in British talkies fifteen months ago, and was starred in three London-made audible films before coming to New York to be featured in A. H. Woods's stage production, "Scotland Yard."

CHILDREN IN LEADS

Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green and Junior Durkin have the leading roles as Tom, Becky and Huck in Paramount's filmization of Mark Twain's immortal story, "Tom Sawyer."

Youths Chosen to Appear in Mystery Play

Master Gust and Jimmie Dakes, two boys from the stage and screen personality classes of the McAdam Normal and Professional School of Dancing, were the only two local boys selected to appear in the all-star cast of the "Subway Express," which has just closed a successful run at the Mason Theater. These youngsters have been engaged to appear with this company for the next four weeks in San Francisco.

HACKATHORNE'S COMEBACK

George Hackathorne is making a comeback in pictures. He has just finished in his second George Arthur Durlam production, "Beyond the Law," and is preparing to start his third.

Young Phillips Holmes is said to have been besieged by offers since his appearance in Edmund Goulding's "The Devil's Holiday." This youth gave one of the best portrayals that have come from the studios these many months. He is the son of Taylor Holmes, a tall athletic blond with aquiline features and a splendid intellect. He will probably play opposite Helen Twelvetrees in her next picture.

Attendance at Preparatory School Limited

Limited to twenty-four resident pupils under 15 years of age, Miss Thomas's School for Girls, at 325 West Adams street, a preparatory school for the Girls' Collegiate and Marlborough schools, has opened its fall term with prospects of one of the most successful years in its history, according to the principal of the institution.

Time is devoted exclusively to the teaching of the first eight grades at Miss Thomas's school which consists of the classroom building and a large colonial boarding-house, surrounded by extensive gardens.

In no sense a school in which untried educational fads are adopted, attempts are constantly made to put into practical use the tried and approved methods worked out by leading educators.

By the cubicle system, each girl is provided with a room and yet is in close proximity to the other girls and to a teacher. This arrangements gives rest and privacy while avoiding loneliness and isolation. The out-of-door life and lack of crowded conditions reduce to a minimum the danger of contagion.

The schoolhouse in which work and study are carried on is separate from the residence, thus making it possible to give an atmosphere of serenity to the boarding-school life.

Folk dancing forms the basis of much of the physical training and esthetic dancing also is taught. French is taught orally by a native French woman.

Film Ambition Barriers Held to be Baseless

The impression that the motion-picture studios have the bars up against the efforts of young people to break into the ranks in various capacities is ill-founded, according to Robert Lord, supervisor at First National studios. On the contrary, the industry welcomes neophytes who manifest talent and industry, and there is a great opportunity for those who can convince executives of their fitness, Lord asserts.

This does not mean that busy executives have time to interview the interminable line of applicants who would besiege them if no restrictions were put up at the gates. It is because of the thousands having little or no qualifications for the work required there that restrictions have to be placed against indiscriminate interviews, Lord points out.

"It is a condition that no other industry has to contend with, that everyone believes he or she is qualified for fame and fortune in pictures," said Lord. "I have discussed this with scores of young people, and the percentage of those who actually have a sincere purpose and who possess the attributes for the work is so small as to justify a categorical refusal to interview anyone on the subject."

Russian Film Being Shown at Filmarte

"Turksib" is declared to be a graphic Russian cinema offering a visual presentation of the building of a railroad connecting Turkestan and Siberia.

This picture, now showing at the Filmarte Theater, has no particular story. It is a contrast between strange Asiatic types with their primitive mode of living and the invading mechanical civilization. Victor Turin directed.

The railroad covers 900 miles of deserts and plains, it bridges lakes and climbs snow-capped mountains.

"Turksib" opens with a series of beautiful scenes showing the natural resources of Turkestan, then comes the drought and desert storms and the helplessness of isolation.

New Teaching Methods Used

Established in 1926 on the motto, "Truth Without Fear," the Clairbourn School at Pasadena has grown to be one of the most popular institutions of its kind in the Southland.

"The fundamental object of Clairbourn School, which takes pupils from kindergarten through the eighth grade, is to teach its students the true values of life," said Mrs. William Wesiga'se Butterfield, principal of the institution. "In this age, when many persons think that the possession of wealth makes them superior, our students are taught that it is being something fine and useful that makes them superior. They learn, also, to recognize the good qualities in the peoples of other nations, and so they become 'world-minded.'

"Children at Clairbourn are not merely stuffed with facts," said Mrs. Butterfield. "The school is like a home and the children of various ages make up the family. The child learns citizenship in his play and his classwork."

Many Appear in Technicolor

Fully 90 per cent of the currently prominent artists in motion pictures have appeared in Technicolor pictures produced by major companies, a survey reveals.

Though Technicolor is in its second season of extensive use, the number of players who have already paraded before the natural color cameras is extensive, the figures show.

MME. MABEL DU ROSE WILL RESIDE HERE

Mme. Mabel Du Rose, a distinguished voice teacher of St. Paul and New York, has come to reside permanently in the Southland and is domiciled at the Hollywood Plaza Hotel. For several years she studied at Florence with the famous Vincenzo Vanini and was also an associate of the late Mrs. Nettie Snyder.

Director Tells of Pessimism and Optimism

Pessimism in regard to the future of the cinema is destructive, but unjustified optimism is even more deadly and, at present, more prevalent, according to Roy Del Ruth, Warner Brothers director.

An attitude of complacency and complete satisfaction with what has been accomplished in the studios is too often to be noted, according to Del Ruth. He points out that although this attitude usually precedes a fall for the individual in divulging in it, nevertheless permanent harm is often done to the motion-picture industry thereby.

"The tendency to stand still, to be content with what has been attained, no matter how good it is, is one of the enemies of success and it applies to pictures just as it does to any endeavor," declares Del Ruth.

Sellon Cast for Preacher Role in Film

Charles Sellon, character lead of numerous pictures, has been given the assignment of preaching a funeral service for three supposedly drowned boys.

Cast in Paramount's production of Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," Sellon is to enact the role of the minister who finds Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn and Joe Harper attending their own funeral.

Jackie Coogan returns to the screen for his first talking role as Mark Twain's beloved boy character. Other important child parts are played by Mitzi Green, Junior Durkin, Dick Winslow, Billy Butts, Jackie Searl, Billy Naylor and Mary Jane Irving.

John Cromwell, known for such successes as "Street of Chance," "The Texan" and "For the Defense," is directing.

Nurse's Life in Wartime to be Shown

What the old-time circus ads would undoubtedly have described as a "Glittering Galaxy of Scintillating Superb Artists," is used by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to describe the cast of its newest picture, "War Nurse."

The list of players is an imposing one, including as it does June Walker, the original Lorelei of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes;" Anita Page, Robert Montgomery of "The Divorcee;" Robert Ames, now in "Holiday;" Marie Prevost, ZaSu Pitts, Helen Jerome Eddy, Hedda Hopper, Edward Nugent, Martha Sleeper, Lenore Bushman and Ellen McCarthy.

The direction of this group of well-known cinema and stage names has been undertaken by Edgar Selwyn, president of Selwyn & Co., stage producers, who spends half of each year making talkies under the banner of Leo the Lion.

"War Nurse" plans to do for the women of the war what "The Big Parade" did for the men. The plot concerns the actual life of a group of nurses in a hospital near the front.

Historic Days to be Shown in Grey Film

Historic days of the western frontier will be brought to the screen in the filmization of Zane Grey's "Fighting Caravans," as one of Paramount's most ambitious undertakings for the coming season. The same elaborate production scale which made Emerson Hough's "The Covered Wagon" an outstanding silent epic will be given this Zane Grey story.

"Fighting Caravans" will make the reunion of Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall for the first time since they appeared together in their memorable character roles in "The Covered Wagon."

Gary Cooper, who has scored in such outdoor pictures as "The Virginian," "The Texan," and "The Spoilers," is to carry the leading romantic assignment, that of a famous Indian fighting scout and wagon-train freighter of the early West.

Pathe to Make Series of Films for Children

In a frank and definite effort to recapture the interest of children in films, E. B. Derr, president of Pathe, has announced that his organization will immediately enter on a schedule of talking serial production.

"It is my belief," explains Derr, "that children have been more or less overlooked since the advent of talking pictures. The trend has been toward ultra-sophisticated fare for the adult audience. This is as it should be, but I think that an effort should also be made to meet the far different likes of the juveniles. Our serial schedule is intended as a step in this direction."

It is planned to make five serials within the next few months. Of these stories have already been selected for three, "The New Exploits of Elaine," "The New Perils of Pauline" and "The Poison Pen."

MARTIN BROWN DOING FIRST WORK FOR SCREEN

Although six of his plays have been produced as motion pictures, Martin Brown today is doing his first writing directly for the screen. Curiously enough, his first assignment is in the adaptation of another playwright's drama.

Brown is adapting and writing dialogue for "The Virtuous Sin," Paramount production in which Walter Huston, Kay Francis, and Kenneth MacKenna are featured.

Brown's first play was filmed by Paramount some years ago. This was "A Very Good Young Man," in which Bryant Washburn was starred.

Since that time, five other plays have become motion pictures. Bebe Daniels was starred in his "The Exciters;" Norma Talmadge did "The Lady," and Rudolph Valentino was seen in "Cobra." "Great Music" was filmed as "Soul Music" with Richard Barthelmess in the starring role.

Brown's first play to reach the talking screen was "Paris," in which Irene Bordoni and Jack Buchanan carried the leading parts. "The Idol" was recently purchased by Warner Brothers for an Emil Jannings vehicle.

Ever since "Cobra" was filmed, Brown has received offers to write for motion pictures. He came to Hollywood recently and, after studying talking film making, began work on "The Virtuous Sin," from Lajos Zilahy's "The General."

MacKENNA PLAYS SCIENTIST

Kenneth MacKenna plays the role of a youthful Russian scientist in Paramount's "The Virtuous Sin," in which he is featured with Walter Huston and Kay Francis.

GENE MARKEY FINDS TIME TO WRITE NOVEL

Despite his picture playwrighting for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer which has kept him busy for a year, Gene Markey has found time to write a novel. "The Road to Rouen," is the title of the book which is said to be a satirical society story of Americans who play around Deauville, noted French resort. It will be published by the John Day Company early in the fall.

At present, Markey is engaged in writing the adaptation and dialogue of "Rosalie."

Before coming to Hollywood to write for pictures Markey was a contemporary of such Chicago literary lights as Carl Sandburg, Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. Later he published a book of his own caricatures. He then began a career as a novelist and playwright in Europe and New York. He was one of the first novelists to write original stories and dialogue for talking pictures, many of his plays being produced by Paramount and Pathe.

CHARITA FOUND BY LLOYD

Youthful Dancer Now Appearing Here Discovered in Honolulu by Bespectacled Film Star

The languages of the Orient on the tip of her tongue—the dances of the Orient at the tips of her toes. This is Charita Alden, 18-year-old exponent of terpsichore who recently made her first curtsy to an American audience at George Olsen's Club in Culver City.

Born in the Orient, Charita from early childhood has made an intensive study of the steps and languages of the people of that part of the world, and having completed her study there she embarked for Honolulu and hula lessons.

"It was awfully difficult at first," she said. "Relaxation is the keynote of doing the hula properly. The principle was entirely different from anything I had ever attempted before."

Months of study, however, and Charita was making the native dancers look to their laurels, and her number occupied the place of honor in the revue presented by the Royal Hawaiian Hotel.

DISCOVERED BY LLOYD

It was during Harold Lloyd's recent location trip to the island that he first noticed the dancer and wired his discovery to George Olsen. Olsen straightway telegraphed a contract for appearances at his club.

And so it was that Charita joined the parade to Hollywood, only unlike many others, she holds no hope of ever breaking into pictures.

"But its awfully nice," she said, "only its so different from any place I've ever been before."

Charita is getting a thrill a minute in Hollywood. She admits it in every word and every action. Everyone she sees is, for the moment, some star whom she thinks she recognizes. Her meeting with Lloyd still stands out as the initial event in her eighteen years of life.

Among the many things Charita finds it difficult to become accustomed to is the fact that she used one costume for the hula number night after night.

NEW COSTUME DAILY

"In Honolulu I had to make fresh skirts every day," she said. "They are made of layers of ti leaves strung together. Each one took about three hours to complete. They had to be made fresh every day," she continued, "because when the leaves dried they would shrink and get stiff. The trimmings were also real flowers, strung fresh every day." And with this she launched into a vivid description of the knee-length gardenia wreaths which can be purchased in Hawaii for the whole sum of 50 cents.

But in spite of the flowers and friends left behind, Charita is finding Hollywood quite a nice spot in which to live, and her present plans are to remain and continue her study of dancing.

Bancroft and Crews Return From Ocean

After many days at sea, a company of screen players and technicians, headed by George Bancroft, have returned to Los Angeles Harbor aboard the film industry's first "floating studio."

The title is earned through the fact that the S.S. Wallingford, "flagship" of a fleet of nine vessels used in the Bancroft picture, is a completely equipped sea-going film plant. Aboard it are installed sound and camera laboratories, cutting rooms, an electrical department, set construction mills, and other specialized departments that enter into the making of a screen feature.

"Typhoon Bill," the title of the picture, is the first modern sound production to be made on large scale at sea. It is also the first starring picture for George Bancroft which presents him as a sailing man in a sailing man's true environment. The production is being directed by Rowland V. Lee.

Fawcett Keeps Good Average

Despite his activities in the theater recently as producer-star, George Fawcett, with his signing for "The New Moon" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is busy in his sixth picture of the year and his 156th since he entered the films.

Fawcett has maintained an average of ten pictures a year, he declares. As a contract player for Griffith and Paramount he appeared in more than this number. In addition to this record were his years on the stage. "The New Moon" shows him as a Russian count and affords him ample opportunities for comedy. The film costars Lawrence Tibbett and Grace Moore and is directed by Jack Conway.

FLY ON MIKE UPSETS THINGS

Buzzing of Insect Sounds Like Cavalry on Tin Bridge, Director Says

Tay Garnett, who is directing "Her Man," with Helen Twelvetrees, Marjorie Rambeau and Ricardo Cortez, stepped into the sound booth to get an idea of how a scene was coming over. Suddenly he came rushing out.

"What's all the racket about?" he shouted.

"There's no racket, Mr. Garnett," said his assistant.

"What do you mean no racket?" He held his ears and peered into the booth, whence came pandemonium or something similar.

The microphone man inspected his instrument. "Oh, its just a fly on the mike," he explained.

"A fly!" exploded Tay. "It sounded like the clatter of cavalry on a tin bridge!"

colors (exclusive of those done on shipboard) and thirty-five oil paintings. And all this despite the fact that he could not always afford three squares a day. He even painted a picture expressly for the Paris salon and had it accepted.

In Paris he found time to work in the studio of Dorfinant, the famous lithographic printer, producing a series of prints of French architectural subjects.

Pleased "Pencil Points"

In New York, on his way home, he showed his work to the editor of Pencil Points, the architectural magazine, who asked for it with an article about him, which appeared in March of this year, copiously illustrated including two full-color reproductions.

Neither early success nor early marriage—contrary to head-shaking croakers—seem to have turned his head one whit; for one of the first things Millard Sheets did on his return was to marry his Mary. He works as energetically as ever, and having now a willing model, is turning his attention to painting the figure and greater precision of form.

He offered two opinions: one on life—that Mary is the most wonderful person in the world; and one on art: "everything is relative."

Start at Top and Succeed, MacKenna Says

The secret of making good on the stage is to start at the top, or near it, and then stay there.

This strange bit of advice is from Kenneth MacKenna, former stage celebrity now in talking pictures. His latest of numerous important screen roles is in Paramount's "The Virtuous Sin," with Walter Huston and Kay Francis.

"It is almost impossible to work up from the bottom in stage work," MacKenna says. "There are many jobless actors and actresses today who are just as great as the stars of stage or screen, but they have never received the breaks.

"If you have the luck to start at something good, you can easily stay at the top, if you work. There is where all of the hard labor comes in. Once on top, you have to fight to remain there by learning everything you can about your business. If you grow lax, you start slipping. And it is the same in talking pictures."

Historic Days to be Depicted in Grey Film

Historic days of the western frontier will be brought to the screen in the filmization of Zane Grey's "Fighting Caravans," one of Paramount's most ambitious undertakings for the coming season.

The same elaborate production scale which made Emerson Hough's "The Covered Wagon" an outstanding silent epic, will be given this Zane Grey story of wagon trains battling elements and Indians to cross the great plains.

"Fighting Caravans" will see the reunion of Ernest Torrence and Tully Marshall for the first time since they appeared together in their memorable character roles in "The Covered Wagon."

Gary Cooper, who has scored in such outdoor pictures as "The Virginian," "The Texan" and "The Spoilers," is to carry the leading romantic assignment, that of a famous Indian fighting scout and wagon-train freighter of the early West.

Woods Dies in First Picture

Edward Woods, latest of juveniles to be recruited by pictures from the stage, appears already launched on a picture career of tragedy. He "dies" in his first role. Woods previously attracted notice on the stage in "The Last Mile" as the youthful prisoner who goes to the death chamber after a hysterical scene in the first act. Despite his youth, Woods has attained considerable prominence on the stage both in New York and on the west coast. "Mother's Cry" for First National, is his first picture engagement.

KEITH KEEPS AT IT

Ian Keith is keeping up the unusual record he has set since his return to Hollywood from a year on the stage. He had but a week's rest after finishing "The Big Trail." Then he hopped to Universal, where he is playing the male lead in "Boudoir Diplomat," which is the screen name for "The Command to Love."

TODAY . . . .

BORAX SOAP CHIPS appear in a Bright, NEW, Modern Package!

The 20 Mule Team trademark stands for reliability. It is chosen to commemorate the stout hearts of the long-eared teams that used to drag precious loads of Borax across the burning sands of Death Valley—in the old pre-railroad days!

DID YOU KNOW that the borax in BORAX SOAP CHIPS actually has a special sweetening, purifying power—like the healthful, antiseptic action of the Sun, itself? That it gives your clothes a genuinely purer cleanliness—impossible with soap alone?

Recently we found that many of the thousands of Los Angeles women who use 20 Mule Team Borax Soap Chips, really don't know just why these chips always wash their clothes so much sweeter and cleaner!

Of course borax is the answer! And to remind you of the unique qualities that borax gives these Soap Chips, we have changed the old package to this new "sunshiny" box!

And—more news about these Soap Chips! A nationally known research laboratory has just tested them against five of the most popular soap products in the country—and clearly proved that Borax Soap Chips come first in cleansing power! First too in safe washing of woolens, silk garments and colored fabrics. Two weeks from today the photographic record of this amazing test will be published in this paper. Watch for it! In the meantime ask your grocer for the new "Sunshine" package of 20 Mule Team Borax Soap Chips.

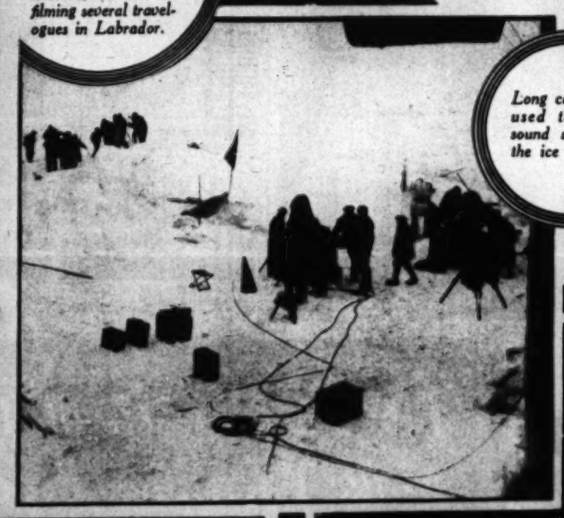
"THE SILENT NORTH" SPEAKS

ONE of the first talking pictures to come out of the Far North is ready to be shown. It is titled, "Vikings of the North." Varick Frissell, a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, while in Labrador and the region immediately surrounding, conceived the idea of filming the dramatic struggle for existence as it prevails in the northland—and, therefore, took a company to Newfoundland, where they boarded a sealing vessel and set about putting on celluloid, both visibly and audibly, a story of the battle against tempest and ice. The cast and crew, headed by George Melford, as director, spent four months with the sealing fleet, and secured scenes of a spectacular nature.

Varick Frissell, producer, is well acquainted with the North, having spent many months as a sealer in northern waters, as well as filming several travelogues in Labrador.

Newfoundland sealers making their way back to their ship, the "Viking," with camera crew in foreground. The men were forced to leap from one ice block to another.

Pouch Cove, a typical northern fishing village, located near St. Johns, Newfoundland, furnished atmospheric background for a portion of the action.



Long cables were used to record sound scenes on the ice pans.

That most deadly of get-togethers, the formal conference. Edgar Selwyn (head of table), director of "War Nurse," goes over the script with his cast. Many famous names are included in this shot.

But, AH, when it comes to real-honest-to-goodness conferences, give Reginald Denny this kind every time. Give it to everybody, in fact. The mam'selles are Sandra Ravel (left), Yola d'Avril and Fifi Dorsay, who play the title roles in "Those Three French Girls."

Then, there's the beach conference, not at all unpleasant. Tom Buckingham (left), author, Howard Higgin, director, and William Boyd, star, discuss the story in front of Boyd's Malibu home.

LONG MALIBU LANE

Winifred Westover surprised Stella, the star-gazer, by the beautiful quality of her singing voice.

Stella, the star-gazer, spends an unusually busy day at the Hollywood beach colony.

Zelma O'Neal evaded singing, declaring that her voice was pitched to reach theater galleries rather than the guests of a drawing room.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

"OH, A Sunday at Malibu will be just frabjous!" exclaimed Stella, reverting to her Alice-in-Wonderland days. "I just love those Malaboosters, anyway, don't you? First we go swimming with Winifred Westover Hart and little Bill; then there's luncheon at Mrs. Milton J. Cohen's; then a nice string of invitations for visits all along the beach, winding up with supper at Eph and Lillian Asher's!"

"Sweetness and light!" I responded enthusiastically.

Price Dunlavey, the musician, was our escort, and we started out in high spirits.

WINIFRED'S house is a charming seaside villa, perched on the rocks right above the sea, so that at high tide the water sometimes splashes her lower-floor veranda. Its most delightful room is on the lowest floor, a sort of library and den, though, as Stella pointed out, the living-room above, with its tall windows, chints-hung, its easy chairs and big fireplace and its baby grand piano, is something to write about to your Aunt Nettie.

Little Bill Hart was on hand. He is deeply interested at this stage of his career in collecting butterflies and insects, and has quite a collection, which he showed us proudly.

Bill is a dear, gallant little old-fashioned soul, with his mother's dimples and his father's air of quiet poise and dignity. He declares that he is going to be President of the United States when he grows up, and he has already won one vote—won it from another boy in exchange for a rare bug.

WE WENT swimming, and then lay in the warm sand, after which Winifred donned her pajamas again—wide, blue silk, flaring ones, like a divided skirt—and we went into the house.

There a surprise was in store for us! Winifred sang for us in a voice well trained and of astonishingly beautiful quality, so that we had to look at her again and exclaim: "Is this the Winifred we've known all these years?"

Price played the piano in his own inimitable style.

MRS. COHEN was giving a luncheon for a few of her women friends, her husband having gone north on business over the week-end. Winifred went with us, while Price strolled down the beach to visit some acquaintances.

We found ourselves in the Cohens' quaintly pretty living-room, which looks out on a wide veranda furnished in wicker, and onto a sandy front yard with its high fence and its gaily-colored umbrellas and beach cushions.

Mrs. Cohen is the sweetest hostess, and we found a lot of our friends on hand, including Lillian Asher, Helen Ferguson, Mary Ford, Mrs. Victor Schertzinger, Mrs. Richard Wallace, Nan Howard, Mrs. Ernst Lubitsch, pretty Adele Cohen, Mrs. Oscar Straus, Mrs. William Thorner, Rosabelle Laemmle Bergerman, Mrs. Allan Dwan, Mrs. Harry Beaumont, and Mrs. Charles Francis Coe, wife of the popular author of gangland stories.

Mrs. Harry Carey, or, professionally, Olive Gordon, was a guest. She has been in the hospital following an operation, but said that she was fast recovering, although she still looked pale and interesting.

Mrs. Schertzinger was reminded that it was her wedding anniversary and said that she and Victor never had had a quarrel; but Mary Ford contributed that she had had a quarrel right on her wedding day, because Jack wanted her to stay in the crowded little town where they were married, and where they would have had to sleep in a tent, and that wasn't her idea of a honeymoon. I believe she won.

WE HAD our luncheon at little tables on the veranda, and afterward there was bridge. Then we sallied forth with Mrs. Schertzinger to look up a tennis crowd to play on Mrs. Cohen's tennis court.

After the game, there was more loafing on the beach, until the cool shadows drove us in, and we went with Mrs. Asher to her beautiful cottage, where Price joined us again, and where Mr. and Mrs. Asher were expecting guests.

Lillian Asher was wearing her best Sunday-go-to-meeting pajamas of pale blue silk. She was looking lovely.

"I told my husband that I was saving him lots of money in clothes by staying at the beach," she said, "but he declared that every time he looked at me I was wearing a new set of pajamas!"

That most kindly of hosts, Eph Asher, was there to welcome us.

PRESENTLY guests began to arrive, including Genevieve Tobin, who came, I think, with Dudley Murphy, scenario writer. Jackie Saunders was there, vivacious and entertaining as always.

Zelma O'Neal came with her husband, Anthony Bushell.

Zelma is the cutest girl, off the stage as well as on. She has a lively way of telling things that is delightful.

She told us about her trip to Europe, where her husband's people dwell, and how much she loved English audiences, as well as their beautiful country.

"They come to see you if they like you, over and over again," she said. "A girl wrote my husband, apologizing because she had seen him in 'Disraeli' only nine times! They give you thunderous applause, too—which scared me so, the first time I heard it from the stage, that I ran off fit to break my neck."

LILLIAN and Eph have two nice children, a son and a daughter, just ready for boarding school, from whom they are to part the middle of September, and already Lillian is beginning to sigh at being separated from them.

Betty Asher already is an accomplished pianist, and played some difficult music for us beautifully.

Then Price Dunlavey played, and altogether it looked as though we were to have a musical evening. We wanted Zelma to sing, but she declared, that she just couldn't in a drawing room—that all her stuff was meant to carry to the utmost parts of theaters including galleries, and she just couldn't pipe down!

We couldn't persuade Winifred to sing, either, so finally we contented ourselves with chatting.

We had heard it hinted that Winifred Westover Hart was interested in a certain young man, and Winifred laughed, saying that little Bill had to look them over, and he didn't like that certain person we mentioned.

"The man he likes best," she explained, "is a married man who always brings his wife, so, of course, that doesn't do me a bit of good!"

By the time we had all had a peek at the moonlight on the sea, it was time to call it a day. So we did, and a very happy day at that.

WHAT'S MORE BECOMING THAN A LOVELY SMILE!

YOU MIGHT CALL. Squibb's Dental Cream the "beauty dentifrice," so effectively does it help you keep your teeth lustrous and beautiful . . . gleaming, clean and brilliant. E. R. Squibb & Sons are proud of the record made by Squibb's in winning the favor of women the country over, who prize attractive teeth.

But this is only part of the benefits that come from the regular use of Squibb's. It is a proved scientific dentifrice. Its formula definitely recognizes the causes of tooth decay and gum troubles and the best ways to combat them.

It is made with 50% Squibb's Milk of Magnesia — a wonderful antacid which penetrates crevices your tooth-brush fails to reach and inhibits destructive germ acids.

As for your gums — Milk of Magnesia has been used by dentists for years to soothe irritated gum tissues. And so each time you use Squibb's Dental Cream you promote the health of your gums. You guard The Danger Line — where gums meet teeth, where so many troubles occur.

You couldn't use a safer dentifrice than Squibb's. It contains no grit, no astringents, nothing which might possibly injure.

Get a tube from your druggist and begin using it regularly. Brush both gums and teeth thoroughly twice a day. Squibb's Dental Cream and regular mouth inspection by your dentist will surely protect the beauty of your smile.

RAISING A NEW CROP OF FIRE FIGHTERS

ON A 250-acre tract of land in the Big Tujunga Canyon, donated for its use by the U. S. Forest Service, the vocational department of the Los Angeles city school district is making an hydra-headed assault on the Southland demon, fire, by teaching boys, first, how to prevent fires through reforestation and water conservation, and, second, how to handle them when they come. An article further explaining the significance of these photos will be found in today's issue of the Farm and Garden magazine.

All California agrees with these famous 10

You know them all—ten famous California cooking authorities. Prudence Penny, Mamie D. Evans, Mildred Kitchen, Belle de Graf, of Home Economics and newspaper fame; Meyer of the Mark Hopkins, Iberti of the Hotel Oakland, Mary K. Solari of Solari's, Ehlers of the Roosevelt, Bassetti of the Ambassador, and Gregorio of Victor Hugo's. They find that Parfay has all the fine points that make a shortening ideal.

"Never before a shortening like PARFAY!"

They were skeptical at first. There never had been one cooking fat that combined the points of all the others. These ten California experts weren't sure there could be!

Point by point, they named advantages, built up a picture of one perfect product.

Then—we went ahead with Parfay, the new-type blended shortening.

Without a falter it stood the tests of these experts! Each one pounced upon it for his favorite point. There were no failures, no disappointments.

The array of good things they made with Parfay! Pies and tarts, biscuits and croquettes, fritters and cakes and cookies. Parfay—just the one product, Parfay—gave results never before possible with a single shortening.

- Parfay keeps indefinitely. It has a snow white purity, and no flavor. Think what such purity means in food flavors!
- Parfay is hydrogenized. That gives fine cake texture and saves much time in the mixing and creaming.
- Fried foods cooked in Parfay are crisp and greaseless. You can get intense heat with no smoke or odor.
- If you've sighed for old-fashioned flaky pies, Parfay will be dear to your heart. It makes that good old springy dough.
- As delightfully modern a product as Parfay couldn't have an awkward container. The slim new box is a joy in the ice box.

Nothing was omitted—no leniency shown. Parfay's tests were rigorous, its triumph complete. "Never before a cooking fat like this," said the enthusiastic ten. "It's ideal."

They are positive you'll agree with them. Because we're sure, too, your dealer has been told to refund the cost if you don't like Parfay. Get it for tomorrow's cooking!

Your Fontana Farm is Ready, NOW

Pay only $1335 down on land, apartment, poultry unit . . . less if you select unplanted land. Pay around $250 for furniture at storage, or bring your own. Pay $1.65 for 2-months pullets, or $1.50 apiece for young layers. $4000 will do all your financing and leave hundreds in the bank. Rely on your farm for the rest.

$1,335 Down

will start you on a short cut to a similar success

IF YOU have reached a point where independence, a comfortable living, and an assured income mean something to you, read the Sindahls' story.

It is typical of what Fontana folk are doing. And you need not wait so long or work so hard for your success as the Sindahls did.

$1335 will start you on a short-cut to a similar success. Pay this small amount down on 2½ acres of budded walnuts, a model University Poultry Unit, and a modern Efficiency Apartment, and move in tomorrow, if you wish.

Stock your Poultry Unit with 1200 laying pullets and enjoy a living income from the very first week. Pay nothing more on principal for an entire year. Pay only simple interest at 7% on unpaid balances. Pay no more in principal and interest combined than you would pay in rent alone for a simple city home.

$125 to $150 NET per Month

With your hens in full production, expect $125 to $150 per month net. And do not compare this income in Fontana with what it would buy in the city. With the produce of your farm, $50 per month should cover all the foods you will buy for a family of three. There will be no expensive incidentals. With good management, your farm should earn you a living, meet the payments on your place, and earn you a profit from the time your hens begin to lay.

Your own co-operative association will furnish poultry feeds and supplies at the lowest possible cost and market your eggs for you at the highest possible price. University-trained poultry experts will work with you to make your poultry yield maximum profits. In a few years, with your walnuts in full bearing, they will add $200 per acre net to your annual income.

And you will really live in Fontana. A profusion of delicious fruits and vegetables, fresh eggs and poultry from your land. Four to six quarts of rich milk per day from a fine milch goat if you like. Lovely neighbors, splendid clubs, churches, schools, metropolitan theatres and shops nearby. Your own mountain playground only 30 minutes away.

Come and Share in This Prosperity

Fontana people are getting ahead. Bank deposits have increased $600,000 in four years. Property values have gained $500,000 in twelve months. Fontana is the fastest-growing community in the county. With as little as $4000 you can come to Fontana, make your down payments, stock your poultry plant, have hundreds left in the bank, and share in this prosperity.

Mail your coupon today. Or drop down to Fontana for the week-end . . drive to the Fontana Farms offices at The Tower . . see Fontana as our guest, and receive a welcome souvenir of your visit.

Actual Letters Concerning the Kitchen

. . . How Income Averages $300 per Month

"Mrs. Sindahl and I came to California from Wisconsin and had been at San Pedro about a year when we bought our place at Fontana . . . against the advice of the Fontana Farms Co., because we had so little to put into it. I am a carpenter, and I built our own little house, and in the kitchen, with small $10 incubators, Mrs. Sindahl hatched our first brood of chicks. We got 150 layers and that was our start in the egg business.

We got our first eggs in the fall of 1927, after we had been here almost a year. Starting with nothing, as we did, it took us a long time to build up our flock, and meanwhile I picked up what I could at my trade.

Now we have 1450 layers and our income this fall will average $300 per month net . . . better than I ever made in the city. We have $3350 paid on our place, and only $1145 to go. We have our little home, brooding capacity for 3000 chicks.

As I see it, our financial statement would read about as follows:

LIABILITIES
Capital invested . . . $3350
Still due on place . . 1145
Total . . . $4495

ASSETS
5 acres of land at $700 . . . $3100
1450 laying hens . . . 2200
Buildings and improvements . . . 2350
Total . . . $7550
Net gain . . . $3055

Considering that we have been here only four years Labor Day, that we started with almost nothing, and that except for $900 I got from the sale of a lot at the beach and what I borrowed from a friend, almost every dollar we have in the place has been earned by the place or myself, I feel we have done pretty well. Putting together my ability to do all my carpenter work, and outside jobs to help us through, have done it. We are only now about where we would advise others to start. That is, we have enough hens to earn us a living income and care for the payments on the place, we have our home, and our poultry units. From now on it will be smooth sailing."

LOS ANGELES COUNTY FAIR

Pomona . . . . September 12-21

Farm and Garden

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HARCLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, gardeners, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of agricultural production are gladly received. Address all letters to editorial department, Farm and Garden Magazine.

The Southland's Own

THE "State Fair" of Southern California—that is what the Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona has come to be in the short span of a few years. This fair opens next Friday, September 12, and runs until late Sunday evening, September 21. This allows two Saturdays and two Sundays for fair goers, an innovation this year.

We think it quite reasonable to claim for this fair the right to represent the whole Southland of California. In many respects it is the equal of the State Fair at Sacramento, and in some ways it has that excellent classic rather bested. And as its big building program goes ahead, it will assume more and more the dignity and grandeur which is its heritage, as the exposition of our own incomparable section.

Southern California is a world in itself. We have all that the others have and a lot more besides. What we can do in dairying would be a revelation to the North Central States. Our haying industry is as interesting and remunerative as that of which any prairie State might boast. Our poultry is a great and growing business. But when it comes to citrus and subtropicals, bulbs and flowers, we enter a realm where the others may not come.

We cannot mention even a fraction of the things which will be displayed at our Pomona fair. Those who attend should allow themselves plenty of time for an unhurried survey. Those who go for the first time will be surprised. Those who have attended in past years will be pleased at the steady progress and will take pride in the great new exhibit hall.

Food for Thought

THE following letter is published, not because we agree with Mr. Horn in every particular, for we think he fails to take some things into consideration and is a little extreme in spots, but because he does touch some failures in our present system of production and marketing. There is food for thought in what he says, and undeniably there are abuses in the modern way of getting our food to the consumer. His letter is obviously so sincere that we publish it without further comment, although we would be glad to print communications by others along some of the lines of argument which he has suggested:

Editor Farm and Garden:

As a result of purchasing a very fine-looking lug of Elberta peaches on the roadside, the value of spraying has been very forcibly impressed upon me. The peaches looked very fine, and the lady was sure that I would like them. She said they had been grown without irrigation and, therefore, had a "much better flavor" than fruit grown with irrigation.

There were many worms in them and I know that I would have liked them better if the trees had been systematically sprayed at the proper season for the control of insects and disease, and I am quite confident that the fruit would have been of much better quality if the trees had received some irrigation water during the growing season.

It so happens that this particular lug of peaches came from an orchard and tract of land that had been abandoned as a commercial orchard and had passed into the hands of the subdivider and the speculative lot buyer and holder. The ground had been cultivated and kept free of weeds for the sake of appearance, while no thought had been given to the production of quality fruit.

Now would it not be a good thing to have laws to prohibit the sale, especially of deciduous fruits, from orchards that had such been systematically sprayed? And then the owner or user or seller of such unclean fruit would be held liable by the horticultural commissioner's office and prosecuted anew, above a maximum per cent of allowed infestation? This would have a tendency, too, and would, perhaps, in time eliminate the selling of fruit by the lug system. I am aware that there are certain laws regarding the inspection of fruits, vegetables, nuts, etc.

Truly, it is just as much an art to produce high-quality fruit and vegetables as it is to paint a picture or to write a book.

My argument is for the production and sale of fruit of the very highest quality. The sooner we can educate people to the point of producing such fruit and offering no inferior stuff for sale, the sooner we can educate the consuming public to buy and use more fruit. The public will gladly pay more, or will pay the high price, if they know that they are getting something for their money, are getting some fruit that really tastes good. The growers should adopt some such slogan as "Dump the culls and inferior fruit!" "Offer for sale only fruit of superior quality!" This would have a tendency to relieve the overproduction problem. The poor fruit would be kept off the market and the high-quality fruit would be consumed. The small grower who could not produce high-quality fruit would be shut out. All commercial growers should band themselves together under some such program.

Getting high-quality fruit over to the consumer does not stop with the producer or with the production end. The greatest care should be exercised by the pickers in the orchard. They should know the degree of ripeness at which the fruit should be picked and should pick it only when it is ready. Every precaution to the minutest detail should be exercised to prevent bruising fruit, for bruised fruit soon decays and is not fit for consumption, even though not rotten.

The same care in handling should be exercised by the packers, the truck men who haul it to market and the express people who handle it, if shipments are made by express.

Then, finally, the shop people who dish it out to the public need attention. As a consumer of all kinds of fresh fruits and vegetables, I am prone to observe the methods of handling in the market. Boys shout their wares and dish out to you fresh, ripe figs that have reached the market in A1 condition; if you do not object, they toss them into a bag as if they were brickbats or baseballs, and I have observed them do the same with fresh, ripe persimmons. In fact, all thoroughly ripe fruit should be served out to the public in conveniently-sized baskets, gently packed and not thrown into bags like baseballs, to be mashed into mush before one gets home.

I may cite also for example a dispenser of fresh spinach that is fresh, crisp and in perfect condition. The clerk in dishing it out to you, three bunches for 10 cents, wraps it tightly in paper and ties it into a bundle as if it were so much cotton. Spinach wrapped tightly in a bundle is crushed, bruised and soon deteriorates, and often by the time the purchaser gets home it is not good green feed fit for chickens. Spinach wrapped loosely will not be bruised or crushed and will keep much better.

If we are to get over high-quality fruits fruits and vegetables to the consuming public, a high degree of intelligence must be exercised by the producer in the production and harvesting of same, and by all who assist in sending the produce along its journey from the point of production until it is finally placed in the hands of the consumer.

Let's dump the rotten apples and bananas and the sun-scorched and wilted spinach into the gutter, and keep our markets stocked with produce of the highest quality that will be pleasing to the consumer's eye and appealing to his appetite, and thus increase consumption.

J. H. HORN, Owensmouth.

Study Nevada

Studying farming in Nevada with the idea of applying methods used there to their own home problems, representatives of two government county visited the State. From Donnemora, Sevier county, Exemplar H. Stephenson and from Wheatfield, Nevada, came A. E. Nicholls, district agricultural extension agent. Irrigation was the principal information in each case drawing these investigators to Nevada.

Beautiful Country Homes Make Money for Owners

...some of the small productive 5 to 7 year old avocado and citrus orchards in California are located here

ONE OF the Southland's most beautiful country home sections, La Habra Heights, is also one of its most productive avocado and citrus areas. Conditions here...soil, climate and dependable water supply...are right for heavy bearing. Orchards here will prove this to you when you see them.

La Habra Heights is only 45 minutes' drive (south the sun) from 7th and Broadway, Los Angeles, a mile and a half from the city of La Habra, and less than an hour's drive from the ocean.

Mountains, ocean, green valleys and checkered fields are seen for miles in every direction from these scenic foothill homes. A few wooded homesites are now available. Present development of the highest type. Fine schools, churches, shops, etc. in a number of close-by cities. 18-hole all-grass Hacienda golf course right in property.

Yet you can own five to ten income acres in La Habra Heights for the cost of a single narrow lot in a good Los Angeles residential district. Easy terms, if desired.

The Poultry Yard

By Emil Roedel
(Former German Consul, Los Angeles)

While the price of flax straw has been rather low, the price of pure linen has always been high on account of the highly complicated method of manufacturing. This has been the reason that linen never could compete with cotton goods.

These fiber plants usually undergo a very slow retting process, followed by an extensive mechanical treatment before a proper fiber material can be produced, from which a usable thread is spun in an intricate manner.

Many attempts have been made to simplify the process, but all such devices have proven full of difficulties. The acid containing baths would hurt the fiber, which in most cases could only be used together with cotton fiber.

A new process, recently invented and in practical operation in Germany, one which is said to be quite simple and inexpensive and to consume very little time, does away with these difficulties. The entire fiber content of the plant is utilized without waste and the natural tensile strength of the fiber is retained. The resulting material is soft, smooth and glossy, reports say.

Within fifteen minutes the straw is mechanically freed of bark substances; the bast then is automatically boiled in water with a solution of inexpensive chemicals, after which it is washed and dried by means of simple machinery. This spinning material can then be treated by every cotton mill using the ordinary machinery. The price is said to be lower than the normal price of handling cotton. The chemicals do not injure the fiber and are so inexpensive that their cost hardly figures at all.

Several German scientific and technical institutions have highly commended this new process.

Growing of flax is accompanied with less difficulty than is the growing of cotton and the plant is undisturbed by injurious insects like boll weevil. The yield of flax fiber ready for spinning under the new process is reported at about 400 pounds per acre. Its tensile strength is said to be from 107 to 113 per cent greater than that of cotton fiber.

Best quality of pure linen could be manufactured in the United States as cheaply as cotton goods; the fiber is also used in tires and automobile tops, imitation leather and similar material. And as this fiber eventually may replace cotton for many purposes, flax having successfully been grown in Germany and other European countries for centuries, this new process may be of considerable importance to the United States cotton industry, especially in view of the fact that Germany buys (1927-28) about 17.5 per cent of the total United States cotton production.

garden variety, and a white worm for fishing in muddy waters.

The underground life of an angleworm might seem comparatively dull from the surface. Yet, to the worm at least, it is full of excitement. There are miles of tunnels to be bored by main strength, and burrows to be made for resting and clan conferences.

Danger may lurk every corner, for moles, slugs and other marauders find tasty tidbits in angleworm anatomy. Although the angleworm cannot see nor hear, it is sensitive to light, odor and vibration, avoiding the first, seeking the second, if interested, and coming to the surface to find the cause of the third. Thunder or pounding on a stake will bring worms to the surface, Mr. Bilkosky says.

Night brings forth the day-shunning worms. Probably because another enemy, the bird, is inactive, the angleworm comes to the surface then to feed and deposit the vegetable molds that Darwin has emphasized as the worms' contribution to the economy of nature.

Feeding almost entirely on vegetable matter, the angleworm also devours great quantities of dirt which, mixed with the digested vegetable residue, is deposited on the surface at night. It has been estimated that one-fiftieth of an inch of this rich, fertile mold is added to the earth's surface every year by angleworms.

In his wanderings the worm often reaches depths of seven and eight feet, but usually is found from twelve to eighteen inches

Kern County Increases Its Silage Crop Varieties

WASCO.—As more and more of Kern county's 1,121,920 acres come under cultivation, and wild pasture for dairy cows grows scarcer and scarcer, the problem of getting succulent feed and providing a balanced ration for the animals in winter is causing dairymen to look into the problem of silage. Up to this time they have rather looked askance at such feed, thinking its estimated cost of from $4 to $6 a ton too great to make it profitable. There are about fifteen silos now in use in the county, distributed among 275 dairies.

There are more dairies in Kern county now than there were a year ago, and this in spite of recent low prices for dairy products.

H. S. Giddings, who owns and operates one of the good dairies near Wasco, has been co-operating this past year with Horace Strong, assistant farm adviser, in testing out a number of varieties of Indian corn and sorghum for silage to find out which will produce the largest yield on the smallest acreage. With the price of suitable dairy land going up and with the cost of irrigation what it is, a small difference in yield becomes quite important.

Messrs. Giddings and Strong planted a test plot last spring, putting in twenty-four thirty-foot rows—three rows each of eight varieties. This field was treated just as other cornfields are. The results showed that an Indian corn, the King Philip Hybrid, yielded best of all, giving thirty and five-tenths tons of silage to the acre. Mr. Strong states that this test cannot be considered conclusive for the whole county as soil types vary greatly, and next year he hopes to put in test plots at several widely separated places.

Mr. Giddings rather favors the "Big Jim" variety, and planted a ten-acre field to it which yielded an average of twenty and a half tons per acre. He expects to grow his own seed for further plantings of this variety.

Amber sorghum produced eighteen and six-tenths tons, and honey sorghum, fourteen tons to the acre.

Most of the silos now in use in the county are built of wood staves, but the newer ones are of cement stave construction.

Free Moisture Tests

The agricultural extension service will make free soil moisture tests at the Los Angeles County Fair, Pomona, September 12 to 21, it is announced by M. B. Rounds, farm adviser of Los Angeles county. Growers are asked to take a composite sample from a depth of about eight inches to four to five feet. This should be done from two to four days after an irrigation, when all free moisture has drained away. The sample should be put in a glass fruit jar and sealed with a rubber ring to retain moisture. Then the grower should find a part of the orchard or field where weeds have permanently wilted, that is, wilted so that they do not revive during the night. Here a sample should be taken at a depth of one foot and sealed in a jar very quickly. Samples for each type of soil on the property, should be thus preserved. This work can be done any time before the opening of the fair. Samples of conditions between saturation and wilting will also aid the grower in gaining a fair knowledge of the feeling and appearance of his soil at different moisture contents.

Junior Rabbit Club

The American Rabbit and Cavy Breeders' Association recently established a junior section for boys and girls, and those wishing to join may do so with a membership fee of $1. They will receive a small copy of "Standard of Perfection," a booklet on rabbit culture, and other valuable booklets. L. D. Sanborn, assistant farm adviser of Los Angeles county, says that any six or more junior members in any locality or school, or 4-H Club members, may petition the national body for a club charter.

One of the many patches of cantaloupes in San Fernando Valley from which Los Angeles so largely supplies its market is depicted at the left, while at the right is the shelter under which the melons are sorted for size. The truck is making the rounds of a number of small ranches to pick up the day's harvest.

Bet You Didn't Know This

Most of the Cantaloupes That Are Sold in Los Angeles Are Grown Right Around Coast Metropolis

By W. L. Jackson
Federal-State Marketing Service

WHENEVER the subject of cantaloupe production is brought up, most of us usually think of Imperial Valley, Salt River Valley of Arizona, or perhaps the Turlock-Modesto area of San Joaquin Valley. The association of cantaloupes with these districts is due primarily to the fact that so large a volume of melons is shipped from them each year that it has brought them national recognition.

As far as the consumers of Los Angeles are concerned, however, the cantaloupe crop produced right here at home is more important than that of the great districts named. Few people realize the importance of our home-grown cantaloupe crop. Little recognition is given the local crop, in fact, as practically 100 per cent of its annual production is consumed in Los Angeles, the carlot shipments to other markets being very light. The crop does not enter into competition with melons in other markets. Growers and shippers in other producing areas, however, are well aware of the fact that just as soon as the local crop gets well under way there is little opportunity to profitably market their cantaloupes in Los Angeles.

Although of but little importance among the large cantaloupe shipping districts, the local crop is an important factor as far as the Los Angeles market is concerned. This is indicated by the fact that more than 50 per cent of all the cantaloupes consumed in Los Angeles during 1929 were home-grown. Total receipts of cantaloupes from all districts amounted to an equivalent of 2102 carloads, 1154 of which were produced locally. This figure accounts for practically the entire local crop, as but sixteen carloads were shipped to other markets.

Local cantaloupe production may be compared to that of San Joaquin Valley, where shipment records for 1929 indicate that 1902 carloads were produced. Approximately half of the latter crop originated in the Turlock area. Cantaloupe production in this district, as in other large producing areas, is primarily for shipment to eastern markets, local demand taking care of but a small proportion of the crop. There are usually enough "ripes" sorted out of the shipping stock to supply local demand. The situation, however, is just the reverse as far as cantaloupe production in Southern California is concerned. Here cantaloupes are produced primarily for the local market and rail shipments to other markets are of minor consideration.

There are no records available as to the volume of cantaloupes moved from San Joaquin Valley by truck last year, but it has been estimated that from 15 to 20 per cent of the crop was of choice grade. This stock, being too soft for eastern shipment, was marketed within the State. The inclusion of the trucked stock would add an equivalent of some 225 or 300 cars to the 1902 cars shipped from the district by rail, which would swell the total to about double that of the local crop, which amounted to an equivalent of 1170 carloads in 1929.

A Long Season

With melons available from both early and late-producing sections, the Los Angeles consumer finds cantaloupes on the market seven months out of the year. The Imperial Valley crop usually gets under way during May and the Los Angeles market is well supplied with "ripes" during that month and June. Limited shipments are received from Arizona and San Joaquin Valley during the early part of July. The local crop starts moving about the first of July and usually reaches an appreciable volume about the middle of the month.

The home-grown crop of cantaloupes is scattered over Los Angeles and Orange county, with the largest acreage found in San Fernando Valley. There are considerable plantings in the vicinity of Long Beach and around El Monte. Most plant-

The Poultry Yard

Serious Disorder

Paralysis of Fowls Subject of Long-Extended Study

By Charles Barrett

It may be "neuro-lymphomatosis gallinarum" to some folks, and "neuro-myelitis gallinarum" to others, but to us it's just "fowl paralysis," to paraphrase the story of the unemployed colored man and the noon lunch hour.

Fowl paralysis, whatever it be named, is a serious matter, and one in which the practical poultryman is deeply interested, especially in cause and control. Poultry husbandrymen and veterinarians in official positions have in the past expressed a variety of beliefs concerning the cause of paralysis, a disease signalized by lack of co-ordination in walking, followed by lameness or limping, followed by complete prostration.

One belief was that the trouble resulted from chronic coccidiosis, another that it came from intestinal parasitism, particularly heavy infestations of tapeworms. Another seemed to think it was transmitted from parent to offspring, through the egg; another that it was due to infection or toxemia. Another noted that a "virulent strain of Bacillus Coli was isolated" from one victim of the disease.

Absence of bone-building materials in the diet is given by another as a cause. Poisonous feed, fly larvae, nutritional disturbances, forced egg production, crowded and unsanitary conditions, soil contamination, digestive disturbances, all have been advanced as contributing factors. One opinion was expressed by a professor that the disease was simply a form of chronic coccidiosis.

In view of this multitude of varied opinion, it is little wonder that the Storrs Experiment Station in Connecticut decided to do some extended studying of the trouble. The cause and the prevention of the disease still baffle science, but some of the above-mentioned possible causes have been eliminated, and some presumptive evidence that the disease may be transmitted from fowl to fowl has been obtained.

Most interesting of all, to the lay mind, perhaps, is the exposition made by the experimenters, A. M. Pappenheimer, M. D., L. C. Dunn, Sc. D., and V. C. Cone, M. D., of the actual degenerative effect of the disease upon the nerves of the affected birds. The grave character of the disorder becomes more apparent when one looks upon the pictures showing great thickenings upon the major nerves, and actual degeneration of the nerve tissue. Little wonder that paralyzed birds are usually "goners."

Here are, reduced to extreme brevity, some of the conclusions of the Storrs experimenters: Fowl paralysis is a separate and distinct disease, with its own characteristic features. It occurs in all parts of the United States, in Holland, Austria and probably South America. It seems to be "catching," and, once having appeared, tends to persist through successive years. It occurs with about equal frequency in both sexes, and all common breeds may be affected, the susceptible ages being from the third to the eighteenth month. Nutrition is usually preserved during the course of the disease, the bird not having a "sick" appearance. There is a partial paralysis of wings and legs, and sometimes of neck muscles. This is usually more marked on one side than the other, and keeps getting worse. There is an occasional gray discoloration of the iris of the eye, with accompanying blindness. Spontaneous recovery may sometimes occur, but the outcome is usually fatal. The duration of the disease is variable. Tumors originating in the ovary are associated with some of the cases, and apparently are connected in some way with the disease, and are a manifestation of it.

No germs or bacilli as causal organisms have ever been demonstrated in the tissues or by cultural methods. The disease has been transmitted to other chickens by injections of diseased nerve tissue into the muscles or spinal cord. Ony 25 per cent of the birds so injected developed the disease, indicating a widespread immunity, either natural or acquired during the course of the experiment. Transmission of the disease through the egg was not accomplished. Some appearance of disease may exist in the nervous systems of birds showing no outward symptoms of the disease, these being interpreted as mild cases. No relation between paralysis and intestinal worms or coccidial parasites could be established.

Southern California poultrymen may have free diagnosis of their poultry troubles at the Poultry Pathological Laboratory, 1451 Mirasol street, Los Angeles. The similarity of paralysis as far as the symptoms are concerned to certain other troubles of fowls, parasite and nutritional, may make for confusion but with the assistance of the laboratory experts, the poultryman may have his course laid for him.

What fowl paralysis does to nerves. Left, spinal cord and plexus to wings in typical case, showing on the right side, massive nodular thickening of the nerve trunks. Right, normal nerve tissue above; degenerated nerve in advanced paralysis, below. (Photo, Storrs Experiment Station.)

Roscoe Couple Build Up Paying Dairy Business

ROSCOE.—In 1919, G. O. Lynch was milker for an Imperial Valley dairy. A young lady from Texas spent the summer at the ranch and was so favorably impressed with both Glenn Lynch and California that she did not return to the Lone Star State, but entered into a life partnership with the young dairyman.

The young people started in Imperial Valley with three calves. Today they have a ranch of five acres here, forty-one Jersey and Holstein cows, two bulls and good dairy equipment and barns. There are eighteen young heifers on pasture in Antelope Valley.

When Mr. and Mrs. Lynch moved from Imperial Valley to Burbank seven years ago, their little herd had increased to thirteen cows. They leased a ranch on Burbank avenue until they could become acquainted with conditions there and decide upon a permanent location. In 1925, they purchased five acres on Balfour street in Roseve, and moved a house on to it. After building a barn and milking sheds, they moved their herd of cows.

After selling milk wholesale for a year or more, Mr. Lynch and his wife decided to take on the additional work and do a retail business. Their first delivery was four quarts, and from that small beginning they have built up a business that requires two trucks that deliver nearly 500 quarts of milk daily in Burbank and Roscoe.

The most recent additions to their dairy equipment were an electrical refrigerating plant and a four-unit electric milking machine. The milking machine is proving a success, he says, providing Mr. Lynch with an additional hour of sleep in the morning and another hour in the evening.

Mrs. Lynch is quite proud of her ability to milk a cow quickly and well, but she has been promoted to the office of bottle washer, which is fun, since the bottle-washing machine has been installed.

At present one small separator is all that is needed as most of their orders are for milk. Skimmed milk is fed to the young calves, which are either sold or kept for replacement purposes.

Mr. Lynch, who formerly lived in Michigan, believes in "contented cows." Although his bossies cannot wade knee-deep is clover and meadow grass from June till September, they have plenty of alfalfa hay and are kept comfortable every day in the year.

Mr. and Mrs. Lynch expect to increase their herd and expand their business with the growth of their trade territory, which will keep them stepping lively. Their hardest work has been done, they believe, since they have their sheds built and equipment installed. The profits from now on will be used in paying for the ranch.

The fertilizer from the dairy is sold to orchardists in the valley who come for it once every week or oftener, and this is no negligible item in the dairy business.

Notes From the Field

SUMMARY of the poultry survey for Riverside county, compiled from cost accounts and other data kept by twelve poultrymen in co-operation with the Agricultural Extension Service and the poultry department of the Riverside County Farm Bureau, was completed recently by N. L. McFarlane, assistant farm adviser for the county. The project is to be continued for at least five years. The average income per hen during the last year in the survey was $1.80, and per flock, $1612.53. With the falling price for eggs, this figure is expected to be lessened during the coming year and will probably not exceed $1 per hen, the report indicates. "One of the main troubles of the poultry industry is too small a total farm income for family needs," says Mr. McFarlane. "Poultrymen with only 1000 birds who have become skilled in the management of the flock should expand to 2500 hens. If they have not made money on flocks of 1000 hens, they should quit, or be forced out by economic pressure."

At a recent meeting of the Pomona Valley Rabbit Breeders' Club at the Washington Park community house, Pomona, arrangements were completed for exhibits at the forthcoming Los Angeles County Fair. A competitive table show of forty-five rabbits was also on the program, with J. L. Forsyth, president of the organization, in charge. Judges of the contest were George H. Green and George S. West of Los Angeles. W. H. Gibson received first and second awards for White Flemish junior does and first for junior buck, a buck owned by Mrs. H. J. Moody taking second place. Mrs. Moody's senior does took all awards in their class, and her rabbits also took the honors in the class of special does. R. B. Whitcomb of La Mesa is departmental superintendent of the rabbit exhibit of the Los Angeles County Fair this year and is doing everything possible to stimulate interest among rabbit breeders, so that the exhibit of bunnies here at the September fair will be more representative and larger than ever.

Irving Denny, president of the Pomona Valley Poultry Club, recently conducted a party of about forty members on an educational and inspection trip through poultry and egg-packing plants in Los Angeles and through the poultry pathological laboratory there. In the latter place the visitors were shown the work of modern veterinary science in combatting poultry disease. At the packing plants they saw how poultry and eggs are prepared, graded, packed and stored.

Ready for Fair

Final preparations are being made by Supt. Paul E. Kennedy and his assistants for the big poultry show to be held as part of the Los Angeles County Fair at Pomona, September 12 to 21, inclusive. This show, on the basis of early entries, promises to eclipse all former efforts at Pomona, even last year's record-breaking event.

The large tent which in the past housed the general exhibits at the fair will be used for the poultry, rabbits, pets and water fowl this year and will give plenty of room for the large and varied exhibition.

The Pomona fair has become famous not only for high quality, which pleases the fancier and commercial poultryman, but also for great variety, which always arouses interest on the part of the general public. Mr. Kennedy has encouraged this variety by offering attractive merchandise specials, as well as trophies designed to go to those who "spread out" and include the lesser-known breeds in their showings.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHWEST

Santa Barbara The winners of the annual competition of the Santa Barbara County Cow-Testing Association were recently announced by Farm Adviser Ray Ellis of Santa Barbara county as follows: highest producing herd, Santa Barbara Dairy, seventy-eight cows milking, with 338.4 pounds average butter-fat production; highest producing cow, P. J. Mahoney's grade Holstein, with 549.8 pounds of butter fat; high five cows in herds of fifty or fewer, J. W. Paulsen, average production, 449.6 pounds of butter fat; high five cows in herds of fifty-one to seventy-five, Nels Jensen, average production, 392.2 pounds of butter fat; high five cows in herds of seventy-six or more, Rosemary Farm, average, 496.7 pounds of butter fat. The prizes were silver loving cups. In addition, J. W. Paulsen and P. J. Mahoney each won $50 in a special contest for Santa Maria Valley dairymen. At the same time that the competition winners were announced, the farm adviser also stated that the testing association was in the best condition it has experienced since its organization. With one full unit of slightly over 1400 cows testing at the present time, the chances are good that a sufficient number of cows will be signed up in the fall so that another tester can be started to work. This is in contrast to the condition existing three years ago, when about 400 cows were being tested, including a number in Ventura county.

Yucaipa Peaches now, with pears and apples next. That is the program before fruit growers of this valley and it will keep most of them busy until along into November. J. H. Hales are "on" right now. The early peaches have all been handled with good returns to the growers and the Hale crop, one of the largest in the valley, is the business of the day. After it is out of the way, the clings, Solways and Kummels will come in. Pear trees are heavily loaded and the orchards have forests of props. The "June" apples and other early varieties are being picked, but they constitute only a drop in the bucket to what is to come. The harvest will be a great one.

Terra Bella The Rosecrest Fruit Exchange, which packs much of the Terra Bella district fruit at its Porterville house, shipped about fifty carloads of plums this season, according to Manager Wiley D. Ambrose.

Although the opening prices on plums this year were good, the first pool netting around $80 per ton and the second about $60 per ton, late plums brought less money this year than last. Mr. Ambrose attributes this to the larger crop and to the money stringency in the East. Two cars of President and Grand Duke plums are being held in storage at Exeter for a few weeks in the hope that the market will improve. Early shipments of red Malaga grapes from the Exeter district have netted $100 per ton, it is reported.

Deer Creek Orchards, for which Frank Carpenter is superintendent, shipped fifty-four cars of plums this season, from which fair prices were realized, with the exception of a few cars.

Santa Ana The Orange County Fair, running from September 30 to October 5, is congratulating itself on the outlook for 100 per cent increase in live stock exhibits. During the last few years, dates of this fair have conflicted with those of the State Fair at Sacramento. By setting the time about a month later than usual, the committee has been able to avoid all conflicts.

Calipatria The first bale of the 1930 cotton season in Imperial Valley was picked August 18 from the Fred Elfring ranch and ginned at the Imperial Mill and Ginning Company's gin. Practically all of Imperial's 9000 to 10,000 acres of cotton are located in the Calipatria district. Very humid weather early in the season caused the cotton to shed and yields will not be as heavy as was at first anticipated.

This smiling lassie from Coachella Valley is exhibiting some of the choice dates of California's Arab Land to be shown at the eighteenth annual Southern California Fair at Riverside—a classic that is as old as she is. The Fair dates are September 23 to 28.

Lompoc Bean harvest in this section, as well as in the other parts of Santa Barbara county, has started. The condition of the crop this year is generally good, with some excellent fields and a few which are rather indifferent. The lima bean growers along the coast below Gaviota Pass have suffered considerable damage recently from a hot, dry wind which blew in over the foothills. In some fields, growers have estimated as high as a 50 per cent loss.

Van Nuys J. W. Chase, for many years a dairyman here, died of heart failure recently. Last year the dairy was removed to Oxnard, where it is being operated by Mr. Chase's four sons. Mr. Chase was a resident of Van Nuys for fifteen years.

Strathmore The Strathmore grape growers' plant on the Santa Fe east of town has been enlarged to about double its former capacity and has opened the season for a short pack of Ribier grapes. Emperors will make up the greater part of the pack a little later on, the estimate for that pack from this plant being 100 cars.

Capistrano Hosmer and Reid, bulb men, have leased a large tract of land from Carl Hankey for the growing of bulbs. This land is to be used largely for the production of gladioli. Mr. Hosmer, who is an experienced bulb grower, made a very careful study of conditions in Southern California before deciding to locate in this valley.

Irish potatoes tested by an Irishman. Potatoes have been tested for their behavior with various kinds of fertilizer and for their reaction to chemicals to stimulate sprouting, and different varieties have been tried out to see which are best suited to Southern California conditions. The picture shows Theo. McSweeney, McSweeney Brothers, El Monte, weighing in some of the variety plots at the ranch to find out how they compare. A great deal of valuable information has been compiled in this way by farmers co-operating with the Los Angeles County Farm Adviser's office.

Phoenix Sodium arsenate, placed to poison ants, has killed young citrus trees in a number of Salt River Valley groves this summer. The aggregate loss is not great, but several individuals were "nicked" rather severely. They were using the arsenate to control small black ants, and the only real effect it had was to injure or kill trees when it came in contact with their bark. R. M. Hess, assistant county agent, says that arsenate is all right for big red ants, but for the little black ones he recommends crude white arsenic mixed with honey at the rate of one ounce of the poison to one pint of the sweet. A spoonful of this mixture is placed near the infested tree in some small vessel, with several holes punched in the bottom to admit the ants.

Pessimistic declarations of numerous date growers that they will harvest a very small crop next fall have not been borne out by an investigation which has been conducted by D. W. Albert, associate horticulturist of the University of Arizona. He says the dates were very slow to start growing early in the summer, but that weather conditions became more favorable and that even the palms that were last to bloom are maturing their fruit in good shape. "With favorable weather conditions during the ripening season, this year's crop should be the largest ever harvested in Arizona," says Mr. Albert. "This is due not so much to increased production of individual trees as to a large number of young palms coming into bearing for the first time."

Los Olivos A most interesting agricultural project by 4-H Club members of Santa Barbara county is now under way here. Supervised by a committee headed by H. H. Davis, owner of the Corral de Quati Ranch, near here, fourteen boys are entered in the Statewide pig-feeding contest. Other members of the committee are Donald Butler and Frank Wymond of Carpinteria, M. R. McSpadden, superintendent of Tecolote Ranch, and E. F. Smyth, assistant farm adviser of Santa Barbara county. This committee recently completed a round of visits to all the contestants, and reports that some of the gains shown by the pigs would indicate that the boys are out to make a record. Bill Stevens, son of Supervisor F. C. Stevens of this district, has a pig which has gained almost two and one-half pounds daily for the past sixty days. Most of the animals being used in this contest were furnished by Mr. Davis from his pure-bred Duroc-Jersey herd.

Westmoreland That inspection by the agricultural commission of Imperial county truck shipments has been thorough is evinced by the report for goods inspected over a recent month. This included 449 bales of cotton, 12,632 tons of alfalfa, 377 tons of grain hay, 80 tons of barley, 76 tons of milo, 582 head of cattle, 2343 head of hogs, 456 dozen chickens, 442 crates of cucumbers, 138,614 crates of tomatoes, 104,935 crates of cantaloupes, 1377 tons of watermelons and 4367 crates of honey ball melons, besides numerous other things in smaller lots. The report also is indicative of the great amount of produce going out over the highways to the coast.

Exeter The drying of more than 2300 tons of fruit, including peaches, prunes and grapes, and the expenditure of between $15,000 and $20,000 in pay roll and equipment are expectations for the Locust Grove Fruit Company, which opened its drying yard two miles north of here recently. Automatic dippers and prune graders have been installed, ready to handle the prune crop. The drying yard covers approximately twenty acres.

Companion Cropping as an Economy Measure for Gardeners

COMPANION cropping, or intercropping, of vegetables is quite popular with eastern gardeners, but in our Southland, where more space is generally available in the vegetable garden, such intensive cultural practices have not been very widely accepted. However, through their use a great many economies of space, labor, water and time can be effected. This is particularly true in the backyard garden.

Companion cropping imposes several necessities. In the first place, this intensive use of soil means that it should be high in fertility. In the second place, the moisture demands are much greater and plantings must be watched very carefully in order that they develop normally. Then, because under an intensive growing system, with plants placed very close together, conditions are abnormal, far more attention in cultivation, weeding and pest control will be required.

Generally, companion cropping is practiced with root and leaf crops. Different periods of maturity are selected for planting with the idea that the earliest maturing crop is removed, allowing the slower growing vegetables to mature. As many as three vegetable crops are planted together and they must be selected in accordance with the time they take to mature.

Commercial gardeners in the Southland have practiced companion cropping for a number of years. This is particularly true of the Japanese gardeners in the peat land sections in the Venice Playa del Rey Cienaga. They plant on double rows, as is common with vegetable growers in Southern California. These double rows are generally about eighteen inches across, with two drills, one on each shoulder of the raised bed. Between each of these "beds" is a furrow twelve to fifteen inches wide where irrigation and cultivation are applied.

The practice in the Venice district by the Japanese gardeners is to plant three rows of vegetables about an inch and a half apart, on each shoulder of these double rows or beds. The crops selected for companion planting are generally radishes, spinach and carrots, with beets sometimes taking the place of carrots and turnips the place of spinach. Radishes will mature at this time of year in about three weeks, spinach in from four to six weeks, and with both of these crops out of the way, the carrots are given their full time to mature.

Varieties for companion planting must be selected quite carefully too. In the radish-spinach-carrot combination, the Scarlet Turnip White Tip radish is recommended; the Prickly Seeded Winter spinach is suggested, and the Chantenay carrot. When turnips are planted in such a combination, the Snow Ball, or perhaps the Purple Top Strap-leaf, is best, the latter variety maturing very rapidly and being smaller in size than the former. The Detroit Dark Red beet is one of the better sorts in such a planting.

Another series of companion crops which can be worked out at this time is that of the root and leaf crops with cabbage and cauliflower. Cabbage and cauliflower are planted about two and a half to three feet apart in rows about the same distance across. These plants develop quite slowly and so gardeners make it a practice to sow in drills of radishes, turnips, spinach or beets along either side of the cauliflower and cabbage plant rows, about eight inches away from the base of the plants. Any of these crops are out of the way before the cabbage or cauliflower begin to develop.

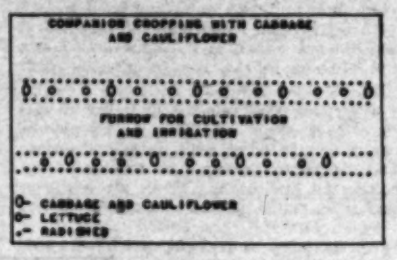
Companion cropping is best practiced with the medium early spring plantings and for planting during September. As all plant growth develops slowly during winter months and as conditions are not entirely normal during these months, companion cropping is not a particularly desirable practice during this period.



"Old-Timer" Trees

LOMPOC.—One hundred eighteen years ago, the original Mission La Purisima Concepcion here was destroyed by earthquake and the Franciscan fathers built the present mission. Prior to that time these same padres, looking for a place to grow grapes, wandered over the hills into Jalama Valley and there found a sheltered spot, where they planted a considerable acreage of grapes, nuts, pears and other fruits.

Even to this day, at least 120 years after planting, visitors to the "Old Vineyard," as the spot is now called, can find sturdy grape vines with thick clusters of grapes hanging from them, a huge old pear tree, fairly loaded with fruit, and, scattered here and there, walnut, lime and olive trees still growing and flourishing.

When the padres established the mission which is now but a ruin, they apparently were not satisfied with the horticultural possibilities of the Upper Lompoc and Santa Ynez valleys and consequently searches far and wide for a sheltered spot in which to plant. Their wanderings undoubtedly led them to this spot in the Jalama Valley, and they established their auxiliary enterprise on what is now the Fuller property.

Many of the older Lompoc residents can remember when the entire planting was producing abundantly and all of the trees and vines were in flourishing condition. Now, however, the irrigation system which was used to take water from Jalama Creek has fallen into decay, and only individual trees and vines have been able to withstand the hard times which have befallen them. The creek still runs sufficient water to care for the entire planting, but no one has seen fit to do this work.

The place is occasionally used at the present time as a picnic spot and those who have learned of its romantic history get considerable pleasure out of musing over the happenings of bygone days. The old planting of fruits is only one of several in Santa Barbara county, one of the most famous being the old seedling orange trees on the Indian Orchard Ranch at the foot of San Marcos Pass.

"Couldn't Be Done—"

But Inglewood Man Grows Avocados Just the Same

By Alice Keons

Imagine, if you can, a little avocado orchard composed of husky 3-year-old trees twenty feet high growing in the city! Picture trees not merely thriving, but bearing precociously, in fact, rather abundantly—all on a large lot! That is the experience in avocado culture of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Connell at 218 West Buckthorn in Inglewood.

Many a visitor to this place has received an inspiration to do things with unused land about his home. On a plot of a little less than half an acre of ground Mr. Connell has thirty-four trees which, he hopes, when full grown, will bring him a worth-while little income. While the trees were developing, sagacious visitors and neighbors shook their heads sadly as they regarded the expenditure of money and labor that the orchard represented. Mr. Connell would point to the beautiful foliage forming a perfect covering on the trees, but the friends would say, "It is too bad! The trees may grow, but they will never bear in this climate."

Later, when the same people were shown the blossoms they prophesied that "The trees may bloom, but the blossoms will fall."

"It couldn't be done but he did it," as Kipling wrote, and what was regarded as a crazy and costly experiment is now making the critics sit up and take notice. The unbelievers are even following suit. The avocado, it seems, will grow in the climate of Inglewood. Even the extremely cold winter of 1928-1929 had little effect on the hardy varieties, freezing only about the last two feet of the branches. In this spell of cold the test of adaptability was made, some of the more tender varieties being eliminated from consideration.

All the work of cultivating around the thirty-four trees and all the work of digging holes for eleven more trees to be planted at the back of the place has been done by Mr. Connell. Coming from Washington, where the green of the forests is a predominating color, he early resolved to plant some evergreen trees in his yard. He started out to find a pretty tree that was not deciduous, and ended by selecting a tree that was also productive. Gradually he has removed walnut trees that formerly grew on the place and has replaced them with avocados. Now the home is completely surrounded by the subtropicals.

Of the trees, fourteen are Fuertes, ten are Anaheims, five are Mayapans, three are Dillons, and two are Gottfreits. The Fuertes are planted at distances of 20x20 feet, with a taller and less bushy Anaheim in the center. This arrangement, Mr. Connell holds, guarantees pollination. The Anaheims bear early and profusely, but their fruit does not stand delayed shipping as well as that of the Fuerte. This fact will not daunt Mr. Connell, however, for he says he will supply near-by markets with the more perishable fruit. Being quite large, the Mayapans do not make such a good shipping fruit, either, and will also go to supply local tables.

Every tree on the place is carrying fruit. Mr. Connell now is taking his project quite seriously, and next year after the trees have

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Connell of Inglewood and some of their precocious avocado trees. Above, the rather barren-looking place they have transformed by planting their subtropicals received the best of attention he expects them to bear so abundantly as to make things rather interesting from a financial point of view.

Because the soil at Inglewood is easily packed, it must be kept thoroughly cultivated. In preparing the earth for the trees, Mr. Connell says he found it advisable to dig out four feet of soil and then to drill three feet beyond with an auger. The lower hole was filled with bones and refuse to supply a drainage through a harder stratum of soil encountered at that depth. The top soil Mr. Connell filled in around the balled trees.

The trees are irrigated monthly by means of basins covered with mulch. The arch-enemy of the avocado, the wind, is not encountered at this place because of the protection afforded by the surrounding dwellings. The hot summer sun, the owner says, is also kinder in his locality. He says he isn't worrying much about the winters.

Being a caterer, by trade, Mr. Connell says he finds much pleasure in indulging a hobby outside his business activities. He enjoys the exercise that comes with developing his 88x210 foot place. The fascination of caring for each tree and seeing that each individual is developing properly holds his attention constantly, he declares. In four years he has transformed his place from just another city home to a sort of showplace.

Before a meeting of Washington State apple growers, E. A. Smith, a grower, pointed out the many benefits derived by California citrus men from active advertising, and urged his confreres to follow a similar policy. "The problem is to get this thought through the heads of men who are willing to block the game rather than invest half a cent per box in well-directed publicity," said Mr. Smith. "Instead of half a cent per box, the California orange growers give 5 cents, cheerfully and willingly and the lemon growers 10 cents, solely for advertising purposes."

MEXICO MAY SUPPLY OUR FUTURE BEEF

By Walter E. Packard

FOR many years the United States stood supreme as the greatest cattle-exporting country in the world. With its increase in population and with the gradual reduction in its range area, due to the encroachment of cultivation, exports gradually dropped off until, in 1915, the United States entered the net import column. The balance of imports over exports has gradually increased since that time. In 1928, imports of beef products exceeded exports by over 100,000,000 pounds. These imports will continue to increase unless the per capita consumption is reduced or the production of beef is increased by the utilization of new range land or by the use of higher-priced farm lands for breeding cattle.

The utilization of the range lands of Mexico offers an excellent opportunity, in the writer's opinion, for an increase in the production of young stock to be fed out in the corn-producing sections of the United States. The six northern States of Mexico can support about 6,000,000 head of cattle, which is approximately 13 per cent as many beef cattle as there are in the United States. The value of the area to the United States, however, is greater than is indicated by the percentage, as the better portions of the grass lands of Northern Mexico are particularly well suited to the production of growthy yearlings which could be fed out as baby beef.

Prior to 1910, the cattle business in Mexico was assuming large proportions. Production dropped off during the first part of the revolution, and from 1913 to 1918, the northern States were almost depleted of cows as well as steers by ruthless slaughter for hides and by the tremendous export shipments made by Villa and other revolutionary leaders. The shipments reached a peak in 1914, when 519,000 head of cattle were sold in the United States. From 1918 to 1925, exports were greatly reduced, reaching the lowest figure in 1924, when only 11,000 head crossed the border. During the slump of price of cattle in the United States, Mexico became an importing country, as breeding stock was necessary to replenish the range. In 1926, for example, over 70,000 cows and 3000 bulls were purchased as breeding stock. The production which resulted from the restocking of the range increased so rapidly that in 1927, exports of fat cattle and feeders from Mexico to the United States reached a total of 283,000 head, which approximately equals the peak year of production of exports under the Diaz regime.

A trip to Northern Mexico will convince anyone that the productive possibilities there have hardly been touched. With a proper utilization of the region's grass lands, the production can be increased to a point where it will furnish an appreciable supply of feeders at reasonable prices to the farmers of the South and Middle West who desire this class of stock in order to feed their corn and roughage at a profit.

A general idea of the range resources of the six northern States of Mexico can be secured from the following table:

State	area in acres	estimated grazing area, acres	No. of cattle
Tamaulipas	18,808,760	7,456,427	140,302
Nuevo Leon	16,067,040	3,763,820	147,566
Coahuila	37,163,520	14,360,662	101,715
Chihuahua	90,691,840	13,661,302	397,975
Sonora	46,166,760	4,966,232	481,548
Durango	40,832,640	28,494,640	133,409
Total	239,244,160	68,923,083	1,404,305

The choicest range is in the comparatively narrow strip of land lying between the desert section of Eastern Chihuahua and Western Coahuila and the pine-covered plateaus of the high Sierra, which form the backbone of the country. Here, the rainfall averages about twenty inches and comes from June to October. The altitude ranges from 5000 to 7000 feet above sea level, so that the temperatures during the summer months are moderate. The winters are clear and cool, but not cold, except in the higher mountains. Snow falls in occasional years in the valleys, but disappears within a few hours.

Numerous creeks and rivers furnish an ample supply of stock water during the period from June to December. Artificial storage by the construction of small dams in the stream beds or by the boring of wells is necessary for the proper distribution of water during the dry months, for although many of the streams are perennial, some of the grazing area is at too great a distance from them to serve satisfactorily.

Gramma grass, one of the best known range grasses of the western portion of the United States, is most common in this area. It furnishes a succulent feed during the summer and fall months and cures as a palatable feed during the dry spring period. The area is free from fever ticks, due to the elevation. This grass land, which extends through Central Durango, Western Chihuahua and Eastern Sonora, is generally considered by cattlemen to be the finest cattle range in North America.

Sonora Ahead

Most of the exports of cattle to the United States at present come from the State of Sonora, where the cattlemen were quicker to restock the range after the revolution than those elsewhere. The conditions in Sonora are comparable in many ways to those in Western Chihuahua. Large, well-grassed areas exist, which, when used in conjunction with small irrigated valleys, form very favorable grazing conditions.

Juan and Manuel no longer squash oozy mud between their toes when they're making adobe bricks. They use a concrete mixer these days.

The Bumstead home is rustic, Indianesque, being modeled on lines that are decidedly Hopi. Its thick adobe walls are heavily coated with brown-stained plaster.

Adobe Goes Modern

By Ernest Douglas

THE lowly adobe has gone modern. No longer is use of this cheap and once proletarian building material restricted to the Mexican peon and to the lonely homesteader on the "Great Open Spaces" who can neither afford nor obtain anything else. No, sir! The sun-dried mud block of the West has been adopted by people of means and by the twentieth-century builder accustomed to working in stone and concrete and brick and lumber. It forms the walls of palatial residences erected for wealthy folk who demand comfort, beauty and harmony with the surroundings of this sun-drenched land. And the less wealthy are coming more and more to use adobe for homes less palatial.

Modern machinery is now employed in the manufacture of the adobe. Once the mud and the straw which helps to hold it together were mixed by bare feet treading industriously in a big box, a trough or a mere puddle in the ground. Now this is accomplished much more rapidly and much more thoroughly by a concrete mixer. The lazy crooning of Juan or Manuel, rejoicing as the oozy "lodo" squashes through his toes, has given way to the put-put of a gasoline engine.

The tradition that only a Mexican can make good adobes has been exploded in Arizona, and the veil of semimystery thrown about the art has been rent. Formerly it was thought that the "paisano" possessed some mysterious sixth sense, some faculty inherited from remote Indian ancestors, which no mere white man could hope to acquire. Now it is known that any competent workman can turn out adobes as durable as any molded by the Aztecs before the days of Cortez, and a really bright one is likely to figure out improvements in the process.

Another disproved fallacy is that only earth of a certain texture is necessary to the fabrication of adobes. Indeed, there is a certain hard, tight, clayey soil that is called "adobe." Instances have been known where adobes, or loads of earth for their making, were hauled for miles. In most instances this was wholly unnecessary. Sand won't do, of course, but there is reason to believe that almost any soil that doesn't contain too much gravel is suitable. This is particularly true when the finished wall is to be protected from the weather by a coat of stucco or cement, which is the approved practice today.

All this has not come about at once, or even recently. Ever since California, Arizona and New Mexico became a part of the United States, many Americans have recognized the value of adobe in excluding both cold and heat and have realized that it is by no means the flimsy, short-lived material that the unthinking have assumed. There are hundreds of old, old houses in these States that were made with adobe, not because the builders could afford nothing better but because they knew that, under their conditions of climate and rainfall, there was nothing better. And as for cost, adobe, built just right, is by no means always the cheapest. Indeed, wood is usually less expensive and there are many who contend that this is also true of concrete blocks.

Good-by, Romance!

Adobe construction has taken something of a "spurt" in Salt River Valley in Arizona in the last few years. Today, one cannot drive more than a few blocks about Phoenix or any of the other valley towns without passing an adobe yard. "Adobes for Sale" is common in the advertising columns of the newspapers.

So far as is known, the concrete mixer was first utilized in mixing adobe mud about two years ago at the magnificent Biltmore Hotel, situated in the foothills northeast of Phoenix and owned principally by William Wrigley, Jr. The hotel itself is of concrete, but the detached servants' quarters, the clubhouse on the golf course, the stables and other outbuildings are adobe. They are covered with about an inch of concrete plaster which is stained a certain shade of brown that merges inconspicuously and pleasingly into the background of rugged, rocky hills.

When Col. and Mrs. Dale Bumstead decided last winter to build a home for themselves at their Tal-wi-wi grapefruit, grape, plum and date ranch, twenty miles northwest of Phoenix in the desert, Mrs. Bumstead undertook all the planning and she chose adobe for the construction.

The necessary adobes were made right on the place by the regular force of farm hands, some of whom were Mexicans and some of whom were not. Operations were superintended by the same man who had run the mixer at the Biltmore, but most of the others had never seen an adobe made.

Tal-wi-wi's is a light silt, and earth for the adobes was dug from a certain spot where the ground is only a little harder than the rest. Incidentally, that pit will become a duck pond after it has given up the material for several other houses that are to be built this fall.

For each "charge" a bundle of straw was first thrust into the mixer; then the dirt was thrown in and wet thoroughly with water from a hose. Earth, straw and water were churned to the proper consistency, then dumped into wheelbarrows and from them into molds of rough pine boards that were ten inches wide, twenty inches long and four inches deep. In a few days they were sufficiently dry for moving and laying. They cost just a little over $30 a thousand.

A Picturesque Place

The Bumstead home, recently completed, excites the admiration and envy of all who see it. Standing amid a grove of native desert trees and shrubs, and at one end of a long row of tall Washington palms removed from Phoenix and transplanted at great expense, it presents a rustic, Indianesque appearance that could not conform more perfectly to that environment.

In architecture the structure is modeled decidedly along Hopi lines. Even the cappiece of the chimney is an olla with its bottom punched out to admit the smoke to the upper air. The beams are pine logs with their ends roughly hewn, as though with Indian stone axes. Door hinges and other hardware might have come from some pioneer blacksmith shop, for Mrs. Bumstead told the maker to "be sure they look like something that the Colonel hammered out himself." Downspouts are hollow logs discharging into prehistoric grinding stones plowed up on the place.

It is always at least 10 degrees cooler inside than out under the trees, for summer warmth does not readily penetrate walls

Hillside Cut Transformed Into "Outdoor Room"

Residents of hillside homes are often confronted with the necessity of making great cuts in steep slopes in order that a shelf may be created on which to set foundations. The house is built, the downhill slope to the property line is planted, perhaps is terraced, but the ugly face of the cut remains, to be handled as a separate problem. That calls for understanding and special treatment and many fail in their attempts to overcome the conspicuousness of the sheer cliff remaining after the regrading is done.

Mr. and Mrs. Fremont J. Tromble of No. 4207 Dundee Drive, Hollywood, have arrived at an unusually happy solution of such a problem. Their house, facing south, was set well out from the face of a perpendicular cut, with a slope rising steeply above the edge, leaving a flat space 25x70 feet in dimensions across the rear of the lot. An area some twenty feet square at the west end of this open space was given over to the garage. That left 25x50 feet of hard, rocky subsurface inclosed by the house and garage on one side and one end and by sheer cuts in the hill on north and east.

A high retaining wall of concrete was built across the rear of the lot five feet in from the property line, a "return" being carried in on the south, walling in the east end of this open space. The garage serves the purpose of a "return" on the other end. The five-foot-wide opening back of the retaining wall was filled with earth for planting to background trees and shrubs and to vines and shrubs to overflow the wall.

The owners then secured many loads of good soil as a deep covering for the rocky floor of the open space back of the house. Mrs. Tromble took charge at this point and as the result of her efforts an unsightly excavation has been transformed into an outdoor living-room that is the admiration of the neighborhood.

A little rock garden was created at either end of the walled-in area, a wall fountain of simple design was set in the center of the bare concrete surface at the rear, a pool was built to catch its drip. Vines, flowering plants (old-fashioned kinds mostly,) shrubs of upright growth livened the rocks and draped or screened the nakedness of rough cement; lawn grass carpeted the "floor." The result is charming and the Trombles say they almost "live" in the place.

There is no suggestion whatever of an ugly cut in the hill now that the plants have had their growth and visitors remark what a happy idea it was for the owners to "dig the ground away" to make such a fine outdoor feature for their home. Her greatest triumph, Mrs. Tromble says, is to have people actually think it was all made to order and not created as the best way out of a bothersome problem.

One of Mrs. Fremont J. Tromble's living rooms—the outdoor one. This delightful home feature was once one of the typical ugly cuts found back of so many foothill homes, but Mrs. Tromble saw possibilities in it.

Dahlias in Spotlight

ing that. For instance, Jersey's Beauty, Fort Monmouth, Jane Cowl—great dahlias, either here or on the other side of the Rockies. Generally speaking, however, California gardeners would do well to make selections from introductions originating here, and this is not intended as a boost for the California grower. It is based entirely on the performance these varieties give in comparison with that of outside introductions.

At the risk of being accused of undue preference for the home product, I cannot resist the opportunity to point out that California originations are great prize-winners in eastern shows and give a good account of themselves in the trial gardens of the American Dahlia Society! Our own J. J. Broomall, of Eagle Rock, whose introductions are now made through the Success Gardens of New Jersey, is conceded the dean of the growers and the one with more successes to his credit than any other one grower. At the American Dahlia Society's fifteenth annual show in 1919, one of the authorities reported that "Ambassador, in the 'cactus' class, was undoubtedly the best," and Ambassador is one of Broomall's originations, still holding its own after being on the market for several years. That certainly means something!

At that same show, I believe, another California hybridist, Jessie Seal, captured the achievement medal with her variety, Mrs. Alfred B. Seal. Maybe it was in 1928. At any rate, this lovely glowing old rose dahlia has been a conspicuous winner east and west.

Among the Broomall-Success introductions for 1930 are Eagle Rock Wonder, a hybrid cactus, reddish orange tinted with coral pink; Rosina Mehaffey, tyrian-pink American Cactus type, orange-yellow, shading into a lighter tone, with touches of coral pink; Rosina Mehaffey, tyrian pink decorative type; Golden Harvest, which is decidedly not "just another yellow," but a peculiarly rich tone; and June Justice, a decorative, purple and tyrian rose blend. All are varieties being heard of most favorably in the East.

The famous "Ambassador" of J. J. Broomall, originated in Eagle Rock, as all his fine introductions have been—a variety on the market for a number of years and still taking honors.

C. W. Bailey of Los Altos is another Californian who sends winners east. His Charles G. Reed, a decorative, purple red in tone, won a place on the Pacific honor roll in 1929, as well as eastern honors. Dona California, a decorative, was put on the American home honor roll and the Pacific honor roll in 1929, the flower being a deep rose pink suffused with lavender.

Curtis Redfern of San Francisco brought out a variety named Bagdad, a flaming scarlet red of great beauty, which placed on two honor rolls in 1929. Carl Salbach of Berkeley has captured many honors, even in England, with his lovely introductions—and most of us find we can't feel our dahlia garden complete without his splendid mallow pink, Mrs. Carl Salbach. Alice Meusdorffer, of San Francisco, is another Northern California breeder of distinction—and then, there is Bessie Boston, in the business for years and the winner of many high honors.

Nearer home, along with our Mr. Broomall, we have Minnie L. Barker, with her splendid varieties such as Flaming Meteor, Golden Lotus, Canary Cup, Oriental Beauty, Rosy Dawn, Nopal, Blanca and Runa. For the last few years, Mrs. Barker's varieties have rather dominated the shows down here in Southern California. She won't be exhibiting in the show at the Biltmore, September 12 and 13, sponsored by the Dahlia Society of Southern California, but you will find many displays of her varieties just the same, for they are great favorites.

Another grower of very fine dahlias is Charles Cutting of the Superior Dahlia Gardens, possibly the largest producer of tubers for shipment this side of the Rockies. His dahlias are very favorably known in the East. He will probably not be exhibiting at the Biltmore, but undoubtedly some of his varieties will be shown. A few years back there was an interesting competition of growing seedlings at Exposition Park. Each contestant entered 250 seedlings and they were grown in the same location, given the same treatment by the same crew of gardeners, and Mr. Cutting's seedlings carried off primary honors.

Richard Diener of Oxnard has done some good things with dahlias and he markets seed from a type that he justifiably calls "chrysanthemum-flowered" that is highly interesting and attractive.

J. F. Cordes of Santa Monica; Charles G. Seaman of Gardena; John Eierman, of Bellflower; W. E. Trostle of San Gabriel, and A. G. Goodacre, are other recognized growers who have successfully brought out new and worthy varieties and most of them will be exhibiting at the Biltmore.

One of the very interesting things in connection with flower shows, in following them from year to year, is the progression that so often occurs of the amateur into the ranks of the professionals. It seems that it was just yesterday that J. Q. Burch of Inglewood was an amateur. Now we find him with two recognized originations of merit, Frank Miller, a yellow, and Alta Rey, a blend of orange and coral tones. Mrs. Henry Buxton of Santa Monica produced the fine flower which was given her city's name and is on the way toward other dis-

...ave been remarkably interesting.

To the dahlia fan, the high point in the show was a basket of seedlings displayed, as a courtesy only, by J. F. Cordes. There must have been twenty or more different ones and some of them were of remarkable promise. This grower will probably exhibit at the Biltmore show, in competition, and it will be interesting to see what happens. In any case, I venture a prophecy that from his collection will come some varieties that will make dahlia history in two or three years more. He already has some good ones out, El Rey being the most favored.

John Q. Burch of Inglewood made a good showing, and so did W. E. Trostle of San Gabriel, their displays being complimentary.

The largest perfect dahlia in the show was a bloom of Jane Cowl, entered by Mrs. Buxton, who also took first for best vase of bronze, yellow or orange shades, with this same variety. Mrs. Buxton won first honors for best dahlia of variety originated by Bessie Boston, with finely grown Tommy Atkins, not a new variety but one that keeps its friends.

There was a delightfully graceful basket of a semidouble variety called Pink Kitten which won an award but, more than that, captured the favor of many new friends. A basket of mallow pink miniature decoratives named A. D. Lavoir greatly attracted me. I believe we need this dainty type of dahlia and this variety was very effective. Some one showed a basket of Mrs. Albert Stern, an old-timer variety, so fringy and shaggy as to more resemble some kinds of chrysanthemums and asters, but it was both different and pleasing.

The main awards were as follows:

Advanced Amateurs

Best general display, Mrs. Henry Buxton; second, Dr. W. E. Cornett. Best collection decorative dahlias, Buxton; best collection show or hybrid dahlias, Buxton; best collection pompons, Buxton; best collection California dahlias, Buxton. Most artistic basket, Mrs. Arthur Giroux; second, Mrs. Donald Clark. Best basket of pompons, Buxton; second, Clark. Best vase blooms, Buxton; second, Clark.

Intermediate Amateurs

FAR-AWAY FISHERMEN BUY BAIT FROM QUEER SOUTHLAND "FARM"

By Gerald R. Butleett

Three stages in the process of "soil tubing," the de luxe method of soil examination recommended for those who are too tired for a shovel or the more familiar soil auger. Left, hammering the tube in; center, preparing to pull the tube out; right, examining the soil core for moisture content. Only the expert should drive the tube more than a foot at a time before removing the core, nor should the tube be used in ground soaked with moisture.

What's Down Below?

"KNOW YOUR SOIL" IS LAW OF THE FARM

By Marston H. Kimball

Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County

FARMERS are dependent on the soil in their farms for their basic source of income. On the top of that soil they plant their crops, and expect the ground to furnish moisture and minerals necessary for plant growth. Many do not know the conditions existing more than ten inches from the surface! On the other hand there are many who know a great deal about the way their ground behaves. An accurate and intimate knowledge of what lies below is essential to proper management of soil and to the regulation and control of soil moisture.

In the first place, is a plow sole present? If so, how thick is it? Are the roots getting through the hard layer, or is it so hard that not even tap roots can penetrate? Perhaps water cannot get through readily. In that case, there will be dry soil below the plow sole, and there will be no roots at a very great depth.

If there be no plow sole what is the extent and location of the rooting system of trees, and whence do the trees draw the greatest amounts of water? Some take water rapidly from the upper two feet. Others utilize moisture at depths from four or six feet. Nearly all trees draw moisture more rapidly from the south side of the root system than from the north. Alfalfa draws rather uniformly on the soil moisture reserves to a depth of three to five feet, depending on the age of the plants and the method of irrigation. After irrigation, it is important to know that all the soil is wet and that there is not a dry strip between the furrows, or that water did not penetrate beyond the rooting area near the upper end of the field, and that the lower end of the place was sufficiently wet. In some instances, particularly in orchards, the lower strata, say from two or two and a half feet on down, are permanently wet. Such a condition spells overirrigation—one of the easiest ways to damage trees, particularly citrus.

Other Factors

There are many other factors of importance in connection with soil and moisture relations. A man purchased an orange orchard and shortly after taking possession, discovered that the former owner had not worked the ground more than three inches deep. The new owner made the boast that he would produce "such a crop as never before came off those trees" by changing the cultivation practice to deep tillage. He worked the soil twelve and fourteen inches deep. The ground was covered with torn-up roots, but the new purchaser said that was all right, the roots would grow down if cut off at the surface. The result was sad. The soil was less than two feet deep, with coarse gravel below. The trees were ruined. The new owner did not know his soil!

Some land is underlain with sand at depths which make irrigation exceedingly difficult. Other areas are underlain by a high water table. There are places with light soil on top and heavy soil below, into which roots penetrate with difficulty, and into which water may have difficulty in making its way. Such a soil may become overirrigated or waterlogged, due to lack of drainage.

With all these and many more possibilities confronting the farmer, it is very apparent that an intimate knowledge of conditions under the surface is essential. "Know your soil" is a good motto for every grower. It is something like "knowing your onions!"

Repeated and careful examinations of the lower levels of the soil will reveal many secrets of success or failure on a farm. There are many ways to examine soils, and many tools for the task. Everyone knows the good old shovel. But some of us do not like to dig for half a day to reach a depth of five feet. Frankly, we do not want to work that hard, especially when it's not necessary. The shovel is an excellent tool, however, for those who like to use it. Then there are various types of soil augers, from the small "post hole" digger with sides to hold back the earth, to those augers of the "wood bit" type, similar to the tool used by carpenters. Both are good, and are much easier to operate than a shovel. A comparatively new tool—new at least to many—is the soil tube. In the estimation of many users, the soil tube is in a class by itself. It might be considered the "de luxe" equipment for deep soil examinations.

The instrument is made of steel tubing with a specially-designed bit on one end and a driving head on the other. The bit is so constructed that the opening in it is slightly smaller than the inside diameter of the tubing. The tool is driven into the ground with a special hammer, something on the order of a pile driver.

Earth is forced into the tube as the tube is driven downward. After a journey downward of a foot or two, the tube is pulled out, turned upside down and jarred to bring the "core" out into one's hand for examination. In moist soil the core will remain intact, thus giving an exceedingly good sample. In dry soils, having less cohesion, the soil is usually quite well crumbled. The outer surface of the tube is marked to indicate depth.

In the past, soil tubes have been too expensive for the farmer on a moderate-sized place. Within the last two months, however, arrangements have been completed for their manufacture and sale at a rather reasonable price.

Tubes complete with hammers can be obtained "from stock" in two lengths, six feet and four and one-half feet, and longer on order. The shorter tube is satisfactory for examinations in most citrus orchards, but for walnuts the six-foot tube is none too long. For deciduous fruits a six-foot tube is recommended. In many instances, the soil under deciduous fruit trees has been found dry below five feet. If the soil is dry, one may assume that roots occupy the zone examined.

Some people object to the soil tube on account of its length and weight. It is rather an awkward instrument to carry about a six-foot steel tube and a hammer. However, its performance is the essential consideration. In spite of its alleged disadvantages, the tube is to be strongly recommended for general farm use. Every farmer on five or ten acres should have one, it seems to the writer, for the benefits resulting from discovering inequalities in irrigation, loss of water by deep penetration, or other essential facts—benefits which should more than pay for the tube in one year.

Pretty But Not Good

Nothing in the insect line is much prettier than Metriona bi-color, or golden tortoise beetle, says H. M. Armitage, deputy agricultural commissioner of Los Angeles county in charge of insectary work. It looks like a bright golden ladybug, and while of more or less common occurrence, is never very abundant. It is not a ladybug, however, but a leaf eater of the Chrysomelid group, related to the common cucumber beetle, with its black-spotted green jacket.

Spotlight Now Turned on Dahlias and the Dahlia Show

THE spotlight now turns on the sumptuous dahlia which dominates our fall gardens and fall flower exhibitions. There is no question of the appeal which this flower now holds for the rank and file of garden lovers throughout this country, and the rest of the world where dahlia culture is possible, yet it is a comparatively recent comer. The rose has claimed the enthusiasm of gardeners as far back as written records of man's likes and dislikes can be traced; much about the iris and the gladiolus is also found in ancient creeds. Of the dahlia nothing was written until 1697, and then a mere description of a new plant species as observed by a Spanish physician, Francisco Hernandez. A hundred and thirty years elapsed before anyone else was sufficiently interested in the flower to comment on it in writing. It wasn't until 1789 that the first seeds of the dahlia were planted outside of its native countries, Central America and Mexico.

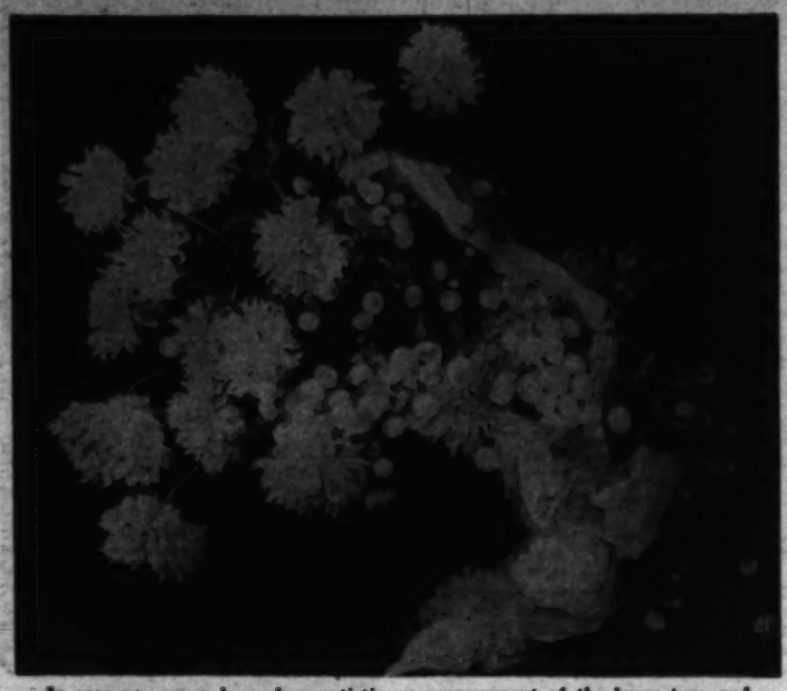
It happens that the dahlia cannot be classified as a subtropical plant, even though it did originate in these hot countries for it came from sections where there was an elevation of 10,000 feet. It likes warm, dry days and mild nights and seems most happily situated here in California. It grows to great beauty in the Middle West, in the Atlantic seaboard section of this country and in England, Belgium and France. This may seem slightly contradictory until we consider that during their summer months they have hot, dry days and mild nights that are just as well suited to the dahlia as are ours. Our advantage comes in the lengthened season we enjoy, bringing the plant into flower earlier and holding it much later. It takes a frost to really cut down the dahlia.

The dahlia seed which was sent from the Botanic Gardens of Mexico to the Royal Gardens of Madrid, in 1789, grew pretty well for a couple of years and then were lost, a similar fate coming to other lots of seeds sent out. Nevertheless, brief as their stay was, the dahlia aroused a good deal of interest throughout Europe. It is thought that a lack of understanding accounted for their failure to carry the roots over from season to season.

This first dahlia that Europe saw was a very insignificant thing compared to the superb creations of today, but some people had the ability to visualize some of its possibilities and they continued to work with it. It was at the Royal Gardens at Madrid that the flower's name was changed from Georgina, after a Professor George of St. Petersburg, to dahlia, after Dr. Dahl, a Swedish botanist. The flowers were all single in form and variegated and striped, for the most part. The few blooms of self-color were not much favored. Color effect was all that gave the poor thing any distinction whatever. The first double flower was the result of experimentations by a Mr. Donkelaar of Louvain, Belgium, in 1812. The most interesting point in connection with his work lies in the fact that he used only northern-grown seed. The first crop of blooms came almost entirely single. Some semi-doubles showed up in the second generation, but the third gave him the double flower he sought.

There is an interesting theory concerning this evolution of the flower's form, to the effect that Nature, in an instinctive effort to perpetuate herself, threw out the extra petals to give additional protection to the seed forming in that cooler climate. One thing that has been firmly established is that double types have a tendency to revert to the single form when grown in warm sections of southern countries and, by the same token, the singles are difficult to keep true to type when grown in the north.

One of the most popular forms in the modern dahlia is the one known as the cactus type. The first of this kind was found in 1872, and was introduced to the garden world about eight years later. It was a question, always, whether it was a chance form or a separate species. The color was a brilliant scarlet, but it wasn't very attractive except from the viewpoint of possible development. They gave this dahlia the name of the then president of Mexico and it is still catalogued sometimes as Juarezi. A bit of attention on the part of the growers brought a surprising range of color and also to this type, although it was a long time before they were able to remedy grave faults that occurred in the weak "necks" and short stems of the plant.



In case you never knew how artistic an arrangement of the large type and the pompon type of dahlias can be made, gaze on this basket which won a first award for Lovell Swisher last year at the Biltmore show. Hundreds of beautiful entries such as this make these exhibitions simply entrancing.

Another greatly favored type today is known as the peony, a form which first occurred in Holland, one that habitually produces better stems and has pronounced keeping qualities.

Throughout the development of the dahlia it has been shown that "sports" are very difficult to "fix." In two or three generations they are very likely to revert to their parent stock type and for that reason, the most dependable dahlia growers are very cautious about bringing forth their seedlings into the commercial world. As with most flowers, theirs is a confusion of varieties, all too similar to one another in form and color. That does not mean that we need look for no further improvements or novelties, but it does mean that we could dispense with a good many which have been retained on commercial lists after their form and color have been "topped" by later originations. At that, it is often the case that the later offerings are not as good as the old, established ones, in which instance the novelty ought to be dropped. It would simplify our selection for garden plantings a great deal if the high-scoring varieties only were retained.

There is this which is quite obvious: Generally speaking, the varieties grown and developed in the West are most satisfactory for our gardens. Out of the numbers of really splendid things which have been introduced from northern and eastern gardens, a scant handful of them really come up to their own standard here. When they are good, they are wonderfully so, no deny-

Santa Monica District Holds Sixth Annual Dahlia Show

ONCE more the Santa Monica Bay district has demonstrated that it chose well when the dahlia was selected as its own particular flower, lovely blooms of this general favorite being displayed for the public's pleasure at the sixth annual dahlia show, held at the municipal auditorium, Ocean Park, on August 27 and 28.

Not only are the people of that district capable of growing fine specimens of this flower, but it is perfectly evident that climatic and soil conditions that obtain there are well suited to the cultivation of the dahlia. There is another great advantage, from a show standpoint, which Santa Monicans enjoy. They can hold this affair in a building which is kept refreshingly cool by sea breezes blowing in at the windows—and maybe you think the flowers do not appreciate that! Despite very warm weather, the blooms were delightfully crisp and fresh—and few flowers are more easily disheartened.

This was a real amateur affair. None of the commercial growers entered displays for competition, although many of them exhibited baskets of gorgeous blooms, and the florists of Santa Monica district generously supplied artistic examples of their skill in arranging and combining dahlias, which all contributed to the general effectiveness of the show. In years past this event has been done on a more ambitious scale and there have been many more exhibitors. The flower does so well for people in that section and they've made such marked progress it would be a shame if interest in dahlia growing should die out. Gardens filled with these colorful flowers help make the homes there very attractive to the passer-by, and the large bed of them in the municipal park on the Palisades is always a focal point of interest.

Some of the "old guard" have moved too far away to participate, like Peter Tarabino, who grew some fine dahlias when he was there. Others have been forced to inactivity through illness. Naturally they are missed. But there were many familiar names on the list of exhibitors. Heading the list of winners, capturing the sweepstakes for the most points won, are Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buxton. It was Mrs. Buxton's lovely seedling which was selected a few years ago to bear the name of Santa Monica, and she's still showing it, greatly improved in the strength of its stem. Mr. and Mrs. Buxton won the first prize for the best 1929 seedling this year and their young son, who has been breeding the pompon type, carried off first for a 1930 seedling in this class, a really glorious shade of reddish purple, an amaranth shade, I'd call it.

Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Cornett were runners-up in awards, capturing a number of high honors. The Cornetts have long been actively interested in dahlias for Santa Monica. Mrs. Kate Giroux, Mrs. Nellie Farmer, Mr. and Mrs. Don Clark and Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Troeger are among other win-

New Angles on Angleworms

FAR-AWAY FISHERMEN BUY BAIT FROM QUEER SOUTHLAND "FARM"

By Gerald B. Burtnett

WHAT in the world is there interesting about an angleworm? Harking back to childhood days, everyone remembers the rascal who brought a huge specimen to school and horrified the little girls. And the hours spent by the old creek with a wriggling worm on a penny hook.

But wait. There is more to this underground borer that we thought. Besides being the first and most consistent tiller of the soil, he is very much in demand in certain exclusive circles. So much so, in fact, that at 130 South Olive street, Alhambra, two and a half acres are being devoted exclusively to the raising of these earthly denizens for sale to fishermen.

R. B. Bilkosky, who is carrying on this unique industry, says he is making a very comfortable living from it. Here is how it all came about.

An enthusiastic fisherman himself, Mr. Bilkosky was disturbed at the difficulty of securing angleworm bait and disappointed in his efforts to keep the worms alive on long treks into the high Sierras. He determined to solve the worm problem once and for all. By diligent toil he secured a good-sized colony and planted them in his backyard.

The neighbors were curious, annoyed and finally frankly mocking when Mr. Bilkosky set out to learn the inner life of his worms. For two years his every free hour was spent in that backyard plot and many times his lantern burned half the night as he observed the actions and antics of his charges. Countless experiments with soils, foods, methods of packing and containers for sustaining worm life were made. After twenty-four months of intensive study Mr. Bilkosky says he could can angleworms and keep them alive, healthy and full of wriggles, for sixty days. Something ought to be done about that, thought he.

Sold by the Can

Then follows a tale of commercial development similar to the course of many businesses. Naturally fishermen and dealers catering to them were interested, but sceptical. However, in the past seven years Mr. Bilkosky has given up another line of work and devotes all his time to the raising of angleworms, meeting a demand for them that comes from as far away as New York and British Columbia.

His says his methods of propagating and packing have been developed to the point where his angleworms now emerge from the can as much as ninety-five days after they are packed, full of wriggles and ready to lure the most disdainful fish.

An angleworm "farm" is probably the most unromantic agricultural establishment in the world. "This is the farm," said Mr. Bilkosky. All one can see is a very ordinary sort of backyard. No lowing herds of angleworms are pastured in rich, green fields; no flocks scurry to hand at feeding time. Just a section of undecorative dirt bounded by strips of zinc greets the eye.

But Mr. Bilkosky runs his hands through the soil a few inches below the surface, and there he finds the angleworm at home—hundreds and thousands of him. This year, 900,000 energetic worms in cans of 15,000 each will go forth from these acres to serve as fish lures.

He's an Authority

A handful of soil discloses several yellow capsules about wheat-grain size, very hard, with a stem projection. These are the eggs. And from this point on, let it be said clearly that any observations made are those of Mr. Bilkosky, based on nine years of experience in propagating his unusual crop. Consultation of two encyclopedias and two authoritative nature books discloses that a lot of opinions have been passed on what, when, how, where and why is an angleworm, and no two seem to agree. Mr. Bilkosky has his opinions, some of which are quite original. At least they are founded on his own observation.

Two infant worms hatch from each egg, he says. They are, respectively, male and female and go on through life forever together, unless separated by cruel fate. He has segregated pairs, observed them and, after they have reached good size, has marked them with different colored inks and released them in with the colony. Invariably, he says, the pair get together, even when associating with 10,000 other worms. "Observe the lowly angleworm" might be a good motto to hang in marriage-license bureaus.

The number of worms hatching from one egg is a disputed point. Another has to do with sex. One authority says that the worm is hermaphroditic. Mr. Bilkosky doesn't think so. After mating, he says, the female deposits 500 eggs per year, in periods about two days apart. The male follows and covers each egg with a glue-like film that protects it from water. This is not fertilization of the egg, Mr. Bilkosky asserts, but a protective measure, fertilization being accomplished otherwise.

The eggs hatch in from twenty-one to twenty-seven days. Then another pair takes up the course of true love. Although there are nearly 1000 varieties of earthworms, Mr. Bilkosky raises only three sorts, the bloodworm, the common orchard and Alhambra's angleworm "farmer," R. B. Bilkosky, and some of his freshly harvested crop, all ready for packing. Mr. Bilkosky says he can't see anything disgusting about "fish" worms—they're his bread and butter.

Any time you're so blue you feel like going into the garden and—well, anyhow, Mr. Bilkosky has just the garden. At the left is bait enough to satisfy any fisherman or any fish—and it took just one thrust of a spading fork to get 'em. At the right, Mrs. Bilkosky and a helper are packing the angleworms, five dozen to a can, so the angler won't have to dig for them. Above are worms and eggs. The photos are by Newton H. Berlin.

New Trees for Old

SCHOOLBOYS BUSY RESTORING FORESTS

By Valerie Watrous

HIGH up in the folds of the San Gabriel Mountains where fire ravaged the watersheds of the Big Tujunga six years ago, sun-browned boys from the Los Angeles school playgrounds are hard at work repairing damage done by careless campers. They are coaxing back the green to rain-eroded hillsides, and they insist that they are having "a swell time" doing it.

When this work was begun in 1925, following such devastating forest fires throughout the forty-eight States that the public conscience was thoroughly awakened to the priceless value of trees, the Los Angeles City School District began carrying its agricultural program out into the hills. The school authorities thought it a good idea to give the boys first-hand information on the relation between trees in the mountains and running streams of water on the plain. It was imperative that a new generation understand these things.

The moving spirits in this work were William R. Tanner, who has a fine capacity for organization, and Francis M. Fultz, an authority on nature study. The combined abilities of these two were directed toward building up the work on a basis of practical instruction.

With a scarred mountain side as a working ground and the spirit of good citizenship as a beginning groups of schoolboys set forth on planting expeditions.

Five years have passed since that first December excursion. The work has prospered. Since the start it has had the indorsement of the United States Forest Service, through whose good office a 250-acre plot of denuded watershed was secured to the schools.

Boys from elementary and junior and senior high schools, working under the watchful eye of a resident superintendent, have built trails, made concrete basins, gathered and planted seeds of chaparral and other native growths, potted thousands of young trees and planted them, nursery style, upon the mountainsides.

All of the materials used at the two camps have been reclaimed from refuse heaps. Crippled and abandoned equipment has been rehabilitated, hauled to the camps and, creaking and wheezing a bit from the disabilities of age, has been made to serve in the upbuilding of the work.

Year 'Round Effort

Every day of the year, weather permitting (and the weatherman has been kindly disposed toward this reforestation project,) from fifteen to twenty-five boys, their knapsacks filled with food, trudge up the long and tortuous road that leads up and ever upward from Oak Wild. Cooking their food in primitive stone fireplaces in the big mess house, sleeping in army cots out under the stars, or in bunks constructed around the walls of their big room, they spend a happy twenty-four or forty-eight hours in this wilderness retreat. Two hours of labor is given to the camp. The remainder of the time is spent in reforesting the areas dedicated to the schools from which they have come.

And when these boys lead a visitor to the Fairfax plot, or whatever the name of the school to which it is dedicated, they puff like pouter pigeons and strut a bit as they point out tender sprigs of green which their hands have planted on the rock-ribbed barrens.

Many of the young trees are grown in school gardens by boys who have carried them thirty miles up steep inclines and down sharp grades to find a home in the Big Tujunga. The delicate nurslings fight for their lives and do their bit in loosening up the soil and in building up again the precious moisture-conserving leaf mold reduced to ashes by the heat of the flames.

Know Their "Stuff"

The boys are taught that leaf mold absorbs the rain and helps the moisture to follow the tiny rootlets down into the soil. They learn that this in itself is part of the program of flood control on which their State is spending millions of dollars.

Any one of these eighth-grade boys will tell you that a tree is not only a contribution to the landscape, but will likely add: "If we don't take care of our trees and plant where we've cut 'em down, we're goin' to be as dry as the ol' Gobi desert a lot of the time down below."

And while the boys are taking care of their long rows of seed beds, they also are meeting the birds, the insects and the flowers of their own California hills.

Cases of specimens adorn the walls of their big living-room at Clear Creek camp, and these young visitors can give the name and life cycle of every one.

When the day is over, and the mess where the boys have cooked their evening meal is clean and orderly, they gather in the living-room before a blazing log fire to tell stories, play games or dream their own youthful dreams of conquest.

Those who have visited the camp are eager to return. Those new to the Los Angeles schools arrive a bit skeptically, but go home convinced that Clear Creek camp and Forest Center are "swell" places for a boy.

"I'd been in the Rockies. I come from Telluride, but . . . Gee whiz! We didn't have anything as swell as this," one slim youth declared. "I hope they'll let me come again soon."

Together with a large part of the East and Middle Western States, Southern California has suffered a long-continued shortage of rain which has curtailed planting. The work of reforestation has persisted, but careful selection of material has been necessary and only drought-resisting shrubs and trees, native to the district, have been planted. The woeful waste of six years ago must be repaired, first with cover crops and later with trees to conserve the precious moisture.

Approves Quarantine

California's careful exclusion policy toward insect pests is just right, in the opinion of Dr. Filippo Silvestri of the Royal Institute of Agriculture, Portici, Italy, who is here for a survey of California. "California occupies, for the moment, a superior position by reason of freedom from major insect pests and diseases," Dr. Silvestri is quoted as declaring. "If California is solicitous of its future welfare, it will take every precaution to maintain the strong defensive barrier it has erected through its State plant quarantine and pest control service, the most efficient in the world."

These Los Angeles school youngsters are grading a road at their Clear Creek camp, the tractor being one rehabilitated by the business department of the Board of Education for use in their forestry work. Above, ambitious boys are making a trail on the Big Tujunga tract set aside by the United States Forestry Service for school forestry classes.

Plenty of Rivalry

Exhibits From Many Quarters Will Vie at Riverside

RIVERSIDE.—With dairy herds of country-wide fame and agricultural exhibits from some of the West's richest farm and orchard lands entered in the eighteenth annual Southern California Fair at Riverside, September 23 to 28, competition for premium awards will be the keenest in the fair's history, according to its officials.

Already agricultural exhibits of every kind have been entered by the State Department of Agriculture, University of California, Riverside county, Carlsbad, farm centers of Perris, Elsinore, Alvord, Beaumont, Norco and many others; Riverside County Farm, the communities of San Jacinto, Perris, Los Angeles, San Joaquin, Orange, San Bernardino and Lassen counties, according to Mrs. Cecelia G. Cravens, secretary. In all, more than $32,000 worth of cash prizes and $1000 worth of silver cups and trophies will be presented to winners of the various divisions, in addition to the regular ribbon awards.

Three nationally prominent herds and one drove of hogs which have been winning honors at live-stock shows throughout the country are entered these being the entries of Mrs. Minnie Miller, Wendell, Idaho; Maricopa Creamery, Phoenix, Ariz., both of which are showing dairy cattle: the Diamond K Ranch, Littleton, Colo., Jerseys; and Just-a-mere Farms, Jacksonville, Fla., hogs.

The most successful poultry and rabbit show yet is expected by R. I. Hammond, who will again serve as superintendent of this division, assisted by R. P. Chase of Flagstaff, Ariz., and E. C. Petterly of Phoenix, Ariz., as judges of poultry, and Andrew Stodel and J. W. Gilbert, judging the rabbits.

Entrants in the junior fair will present their own exhibits of agricultural produce, pigeons, poultry, rabbits and live stock, and conduct judging contests of live stock and agricultural exhibits. An important feature of the junior fair will be the Camp Richard J. Werner division, according to Miss Kipf, superintendent of the junior event.

Women's activities will be well represented and in the education division more than a score of entries are already in from schools in near-by communities.

There will be a great aerial show, made doubly interesting by the presence of a flying force from March Field which will exhibit the latest type of pursuit, combat and military planes.

Open the attic windows for ventilation to keep the house cool in summer.

She Has the Range

MEXICO MAY SUPPLY OUR FUTURE BEEF

Tamaulipas, there are exceedingly rich pastures of para grass. Hundreds of thousands of cattle were supported in this area prior to the revolution. If it were not for the fever ticks, Southern and Western Tamaulipas would be one of the richest cattle-producing sections of the republic. Between this low coastal plain and the desert strip running southeast from El Paso, there is a vast stretch of brush and grass land which forms fair range. In parts of Coahuila, conditions are not dissimilar to those in the fine grass country of Durango, although, in general, this section is drier and requires a considerably larger area per cow than in the higher ranges. Fever ticks occur in much of the area below 5000 feet, which adds a factor of expense and loss to the cost of production.

Although a discussion of the cattle business in Mexico, so far as it relates to the United States, is confined quite largely to those northern States, the greatest cattle-producing section of Mexico is located in the Bajia. In 1902, which is the only year prior to the revolution for which comparable figures are obtainable, the States of Jalisco and Michoacan contained more cattle than Durango, Coahuila, Chihuahua and Sonora combined. The slaughter in that section is for local markets and for the larger centers of population, such as Mexico City, Guadalajara, and Guanajuato. As the Bajia contains 40 per cent of the population of Mexico, and is comparable in density of population to the State of Illinois, including Chicago, the total consumption of beef there is considerable.

Many Oxen Used

The large number of cattle in the thickly populated portions of Central Mexico is made up in part by small dairy herds and work stock. In the smaller communities, and in many of the larger ones as well, individual families own from one to three cows. These cows are combined into community herds which are driven into the adjoining hills for pasturage during the daytime and returned at night for milking and safety. One or two boys or old men are employed to do the herding.

Much of the field work in Mexico has always been done by oxen, and oxen are still used on thousands of farms. In many ways they constitute the most economical form of power available. Oxen are usually fed nothing but pasture, are cheaper than mules or horses, are powerful and are well suited to the type of implements and carts used. They also have a salvage value which is an important factor in their selection as work stock. The total number of oxen adds appreciably to the live-stock census in the agricultural areas. There are, of course, many large haciendas in Central Mexico, which support thousands of head of beef cattle, some of which reach the American market.

Northern Mexico is predominantly a live-stock country. Agriculture is more or less incidental, except, of course, in sections such as the Laguna district near Torreon, where irrigation is highly developed. Large haciendas predominate in the stock country. These properties vary in size from 50,000 to 3,000,000 acres or more. The average hacienda includes, perhaps, 150,000 acres. Some of the land is devoted to the production of wheat, corn and beans as a source of food supply for the people on the ranch and in some cases for sale, but the greater proportion of the area of the large haciendas is in grass and is used as pasture. The range is greatly understocked, as many more horses, cattle, sheep and goats ranged the hills in former days.

A Typical Hacienda

Hacienda X can be used to illustrate the large land holdings which dominated Mexico from the time of the early Spanish grants down to the beginning of the revolution. Most of the land in Mexico is still contained in these large holdings, but their operation was so interfered with by the disturbances during the revolutionary period that very few are operating now at anything like full capacity, while most of them are practically unstocked and produce little more than enough corn and beans to support the peons who still remain as residents.

Hacienda X contains 180,000 acres. The hacienda lands are divided into four ranchos, each with its small cluster of buildings and stock corrals, which form the headquarters for fence riders and cowboys who are used in caring for the stock. These ranch headquarters are all connected by trails or roads with the great hacienda buildings which occupy the center of the property. The "casa grande," made of stone and adobe, covers perhaps five acres of ground. There are two large patios surrounded by arcades, where the tiled walks, fifteen to eighteen feet wide, are protected from the sun and rain by a heavy beamed roof supported by beautifully carved stone pillars. A stone church with stained-glass windows forms a part of the main building. To the rear of the building, perhaps ten acres are taken up by stock corrals, with adobe walls from six to ten feet high.

Surrounding the central building are clustered the adobe dwellings of the peon laborers, occupied by fifty to sixty families. These peon houses generally contain two rooms with floors of earth. The windows are generally unprotected openings in the adobe walls, although in many cases the door is the only opening to the outside. The river bottom lands which spread out to one side of the casa grande are intensively cultivated. Hundreds of fruit trees of various kinds are scattered through the gardens where vegetables are grown. The irrigated meadow lands are beautiful in the shade of the great poplar trees which border the river and the small irrigation ditches.

The hacienda lands are fenced and cross-fenced by seventy-five miles of low stone walls, built during the days of extremely cheap labor. Five masonry dams, from ten to thirty feet high and from 100 to 300 feet wide, store the water in the creeks which cross the property. During the dry spring months, the water from these reservoirs is allowed to run slowly into the stream bed, so that a good supply of stock water is available in every field during the entire year. In former years, a round-up would occur once or twice a year, when the cattle would be branded, the sheep sheared and the fat stock sold. The profits came easy, and the hacendados lived the lives of feudal lords, surrounded by their rich estates. Money was available for improvements of various kinds, so that many of these old haciendas are highly improved and still possess a glamour of romance, always associated in one's mind with the days of the Dons in Mexico.

The valuation placed upon these old properties varies, but in these days is frequently quite low. When the revolution started, the properties were frequently free from debt. As soon as the stock was sold or driven off, no source of income remained. Most of the haciendas were abandoned by their owners during the more turbulent years of the revolution, which left unstocked properties heavily in debt for taxes or for debts incurred as mortgages on the land after the first days of the revolution. Where the hacendado has had capital to purchase a foundation breeding herd, the prosperity of the early days is returning. The largest properties are being split up. In many cases a portion of the agricultural lands has been divided into small holdings under the agrarian program.

Scenes typical of the cattle-raising industry of Northern Mexico. The Durango cowboy, upper left, has a deer behind his saddle. At the upper right is a masonry dam used to impound water for stock on an old hacienda. The stream at the lower right is kept replenished in the dry months from just such a reservoir. At the lower left is a stock corral with walls twelve feet high. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of fine summer pasture in the Mexican High Sierra, a bit of which is pictured in the center.

When the unoccupied ranges of Northern Mexico are restocked, Mexico should become an important source of yearlings, cheap feeders, for the Corn Belt in the United States. The reduction in the range area in the United States has reduced the supply of feeders so that this added source of cheap cattle from Mexico should be welcomed by stockmen of the Middle West. The days of the longhorns are past. Well-bred Herefords are being used in restocking the haciendas, and good bulls are being introduced to breed up the native stock which remains. The changed economic conditions in Mexico will not permit the more or less careless methods which proved profitable in the past. The isolation of hacienda life of early days is rapidly passing. One can ride for days through the rolling hills of Durango or Chihuahua and spend the night in the high-ceilinged thick-walled rooms of historic haciendas and listen to a radio concert in New York or San Francisco. And by using an automobile, one can cover ground in a few hours which formerly required days of travel.

A new era is setting in and the prosperity of the early cattle days should return. Conditions have changed, but much of the picturesque character of the life on the Mexican haciendas will, of course, always remain.

Bet You Didn't Know It

ings are relatively small, as growers plan to fit cantaloupes into the general farm scheme, which is to have crops to market during as many months of the year as possible. This rotation is also an important factor in meeting the labor requirements of the farm.

Cantaloupes are usually harvested in the morning and trucked to market the evening of the same day. Thence they are distributed to retailers early the following morning, the early shoppers finding them on display at the stores.

Local cantaloupes can be left on the vines until fully ripe. The short haul to market and the rapidity with which the cantaloupes reach the consumer allow the producers to leave them on the vine until the proper stage of maturity has been reached. The short haul is also an advantage to local growers, in that it reduces the cost of marketing the crop.

Home-grown cantaloupes are easily distinguished from melons of other producing districts. The local crop is marketed loose in crates, for the haul to market is so short that it is not necessary to pack them as in the case of those shipped in from a greater distance. Local growers also use second-hand crates. These packages are used many times during the season and form quite a contrast to the bright new crates used by the carlot shipping districts.

Local cantaloupes are harvested and hauled from the field to a roadside shelter where the melons are graded for size. The most popular size for the Hales Best variety is twenty-four to twenty-seven per crate. Tip-tops are larger and the popular size is sixteen melons to the crate.

A few of the large growers harvest enough melons during the day to make a full truckload, but since most patches are relatively small, the trucks must usually visit a number of roadside shelters or stands before getting a full load. Many truck farmers haul their cantaloupes to market along with the vegetables which they produce, but as a usual rule the cantaloupes are handled separately.

The cantaloupes are collected from the various widely scattered farms and assembled in the wholesale produce markets of Los Angeles, whence they are redistributed to the retail markets of the city.

The Ninth street, or City, market receives the larger proportion of the local cantaloupe crop, although the Seventh street, or wholesale Terminal, market is not far behind. The produce houses surrounding the open court on the Ninth street market receive approximately 33 per cent of the local crop, while approximately 21 per cent of the receipts are sold on the trucks in the open court, or Farmers' market.

The Seventh street stores are second in importance; with receipts of about 27 per cent of the crop, while 13 per cent is handled in the open court of this market.

They're Popular

The cantaloupes move out of the produce market to the retail stores, where they are attractively displayed in an attempt to win a place on the consumer's table. And apparently these cantaloupes are doing that very thing. According to unload reports issued by the Federal-State Market News Service, the Los Angeles market consumes around 10,000 crates of cantaloupes per day during the peak movement. Receipts sometimes reach as high as 16,000 to 18,000 crates per day. When receipts are up to these figures, however, prices are usually to be found trending downward.

Home-grown cantaloupes are always an important feature of the local market during July and August. Supplies were heavier during July of this year, with a total equivalent to 342 carloads, as compared with 227 for July of last year. August is the peak for local cantaloupes. An equivalent of 674 carloads were consumed in the Los Angeles market during the month of August, 1929. These figures should demonstrate that local cantaloupes are well received. Returns to the grower, however, are sometimes rather low and the crop does not always show a profit, in spite of the fact that local consumption reaches the great volume cited.

Pest Gets Nearer

The Mexican fruit fly, a threat to the fruit-growing districts of California and Arizona, is believed to have passed the "zone of defense" established in the northern Mexican States. News reports told of the seizure of two lots of plums on the Arizona line, at Nogales, thought to have originated in Sinaloa. This State, together with Sonora and Nayarit, was believed to have been free of the pest. The same fruit fly has been eradicated once in Rio Grande Valley, Texas. This fruit fly, like its Mediterranean brother which caused the Florida furor, is particularly dangerous to citrus fruits.

POMONA'S CLASSIC OPENS THIS WEEK

Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, New Mexico, Utah, Colorado and Wyoming, the governors of the three border States of Mexico and the territorial governor of the Hawaiian Islands have been invited to be present. Three hundred and four supervisors from fifty-eight counties have also been asked to be present as guests.

The new exhibit building, more than 800 feet long and recently completed at a cost of $250,000, has excited the interest of the people of Southern California. One of the finest permanent exposition halls in the world, it has already been decorated for the first showing under its mighty roof. Last-minute touches are now being made to the exhibits themselves.

A flood of last-minute entries has come in. The county displays, all keeping the Venetian motif, come from San Joaquin, Lassen, Tulare, Ventura, Orange, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Imperial, Inyo, Mono, Alameda, Eldorado, San Diego and Humboldt counties.

The fair officials hold to the idea that a fair is an educational institution and rodent control, forestry, regional planning, health work, soil testing and the work of other official and semiofficial organizations will be featured. The various chambers of commerce of the Southland are outdoing themselves this year. Among those showing will be Los Angeles, with a gorgeous display costing around $7500, and those of San Bernardino county, Glendora, Antelope Valley, La Verne, Ontario, Claremont, Puente, San Dimas, Baldwin Park and Downey.

Among the feature citrus exhibits will be those of the Redlands M.O.D., La Verne Fruit Growers, Pomona Fruit Growers, San Dimas Fruit Exchange, La Verne M. O. D. and College Heights of Claremont. In deciduous fruit and vegetables, Consolidated Fruit Company of Los Angeles, Charles T. Davenport, A. L. Michael, T. H. Munson and many other well-known exhibitors will be there. Large displays will be made by the Valencia Orange Show, National Orange Show and the Pasadena Tournament of Roses. In the floral department exhibits by Howard & Smith, Armstrong Nurseries, Hobbs-Gregg and the White Gate Nursery are to be noted.

The live-stock division and the poultry section have been described in previous issues of Farm and Garden. Both will be of exceptional size and merit. Night horse racing is to be introduced this year. Hundreds of great floodlights have been installed along the fast track for this feature. The afternoon races will be held as usual.

Many contests of all sorts have been arranged, including a horseshoe pitching tournament, churning contest and "farmerette" contest. Old-time fiddlers, harmonica players and stock judging will fill the ten days of the fair with excitement and amusement.

Over seventy-five judges, many of them of national reputation, have been secured to make the awards in the various competitive classes. They will distribute $100,000 in cash and trophy awards.

A dustless fair is promised. More room has been provided and every effort has been made to make the grounds and buildings not only more adequate and beautiful, but more convenient and comfortable for the great crowds which are expected.

For the good of the shrubbery, rake the leaves toward the shrubs and leave them there.

The only sure way to kill lice and ticks on sheep is to dip each animal in one of the standard dip solutions.

Berries keep best in the refrigerator if spread out on a platter.

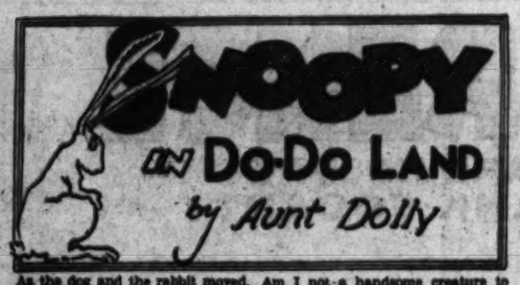
JUVENILE SECTION OF THE LOS



As the dog and the rabbit moved, in their sheltering spiral of sand, toward an oasis, whose water was even now gleaming temptingly before them, Becky cried, in her croaking voice:

"This is a fine luck for us," but she could not know, of course, that this very protection given by nature, was to seal their doom. For, when the storm abated, and the spiral of sand was reduced to a mere heat wave, they found themselves, in the center of an oasis, which is really a lovely garden, sometimes found in the hottest of deserts. And here, beside a pool of gurgling water, stood the Cobra, and the Lizards, and all their scaly friends, who winked with delight as their prisoners were delivered into their hands. The Karait said, shaking his body, free of dust:

"That was a joke on you, my dear — didn't you know we would seek the shelter of the trees?" and he made a naughty face at Becky, who was filling her throat with cool water. In fact, all the adventurers had refreshed themselves. Even the sands above from a sprinkling of silver drops that fell from rocks in the pool.

The Cobra, however, was ready for battle. He fixed his hood in such a way, he looked most ferocious. Then he coiled his body into four separate knots, saying to Snoopy, in his most gracious manner:

"We will now take our little stroll." But the rabbit shook his head, holding tight to Becky's brown coat.

"No," he assured him, "I'm weary from the storm, and wish to be excused."

The Cobra smiled, and it was not pleasant to see. Then he licked his lips, with a long and slender tongue, announcing:

"Look at me, Snoopy Long-Ears. Am I not a handsome creature to travel with?" And he fixed his shiney eyes on the timid little rabbit, knowing that his gaze, if unbroken, would bring him directly to his hungry mouth. But Snoop had heard tales of these wicked snakes, who swallowed smaller animals in a greedy mouthful, so he bowed politely before him, remarking as he did so:

"You are more than handsome. You are strong, and black as the figs that hang above our heads. But, despite all these fine points, I wish to be excused from walking with you."

Now the Cobra, whose ways are tricky, was angered at having his plans upset, so he hissed just a little, as a warning to both the rabbit and the dog, then—quick as a wink—he uncoiled his four knots, and lengthened himself, until he grasped the rabbit in the center of his furry little body. And all his friends, the Karait, and the Python, and the freshly washed toads, opened their mouths in laughter, saying, "Is it not amusing, the strength of a rabbit?" Then they closed about the Cobra, and his prisoner, while Becky, frantic with fear, barked and yelped at the top of her voice. For she did not know how to attack a snake. She had never seen their forked tongues, nor did she know their method of battle, so she circled the scaly creatures again and again, nipping at their legs with her white teeth, lashing them on their backs with her paws, coming dangerously close to the Cobra, and his helpless victim. But he was not disturbed by her frantic barking. He tightened his grip on Snoopy's small body, dragging him inch by inch toward his hole. Then, just as he was about to disappear from sight.

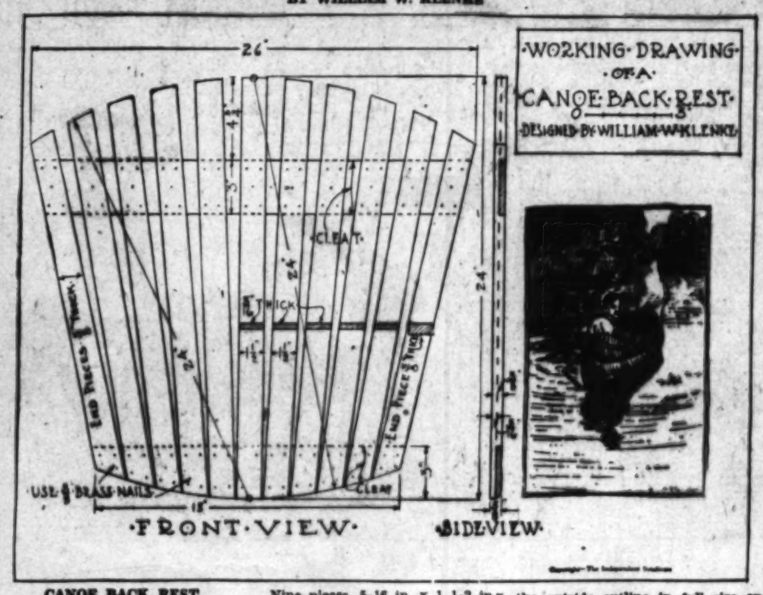
"THINGS EASY TO MAKE"

BY WILLIAM W. KLENKE



CANOE BACK REST

Boys, let's make a back rest for the canoe; the job is a very simple one, requires only a few pieces of wood and you will find this article a great comfort when you go off in your canoe for an afternoon of rest and reading.

Spruce or white pine are good woods to use. You will require the following pieces, called stock:

Two pieces, 5-8 in.x1 1-2 in.x21 in.

Nine pieces, 5-16 in. x 1 1-2 in.x 24 in.

One piece, 5-16 in.x3 in.x18 in.

One piece, 5-16 in.x3 in.x26 in.

Step No. 1. The stock. Cut the various pieces of stock to the correct sizes indicated on the drawing, with smooth surfaces and edges.

Step No. 2. The joints. Where the two cross-cleats and the two end pieces connect, make a notched joint, by cutting into the 5-8in. end pieces, to a depth of 5-16in. thick. It will be a good idea to lay out the outside outline in full size on a sheet of wrapping paper to give you the correct angles. When you have the joints cut, securely nail the cleats in place.

Step No. 3. Assembly. First nail the center piece in place; then tack the various pieces with just one nail at first, to make sure of the correct position. The pieces must be spread fanlike at the top and close together at the bottom. When you are sure of the position of the different pieces, securely nail them to the cleats.

Step No. 4. The arm. With the aid of a string and pencil you can lay out the curved top and bottom as follows. Fasten the string at one end with a nail and attach a pencil to the other end. Have the string 24 inches long. Now simply draw the arc or curve at both top and bottom.

Step No. 5. Cutting the curve. Use a coping compass or turning saw and cut the curved outline. Smooth this rough cut with a small plane and then sandpaper.

Step No. 6. Sandpapering. Thoroughly sandpaper all parts with No. 1-2 sandpaper and slightly round all sharp corners.

Step No. 7. Finishing. Give the entire piece a good soaking of boiled linseed oil; allow several days to dry, then apply a thin coat of white shellac and follow this with a good coat of spar varnish.

You will probably find this back rest so comfortable and so easy to make, boys, that you will want a pair of them, one for yourself and one for your friend to use.

THE CLEVERNESS OF DON RODRIGO

By Elwyn Shoenbaum, Los Angeles

The vast rancho of Don Rodrigo Vallera de Alcazar spread its rolling territory over acre after acre of fine cattle land. Don Rodrigo himself, his staunch legs in the finest of leather boots, sat astride a magnificent black horse, saddled with silver trimmings and gazed with marked satisfaction over the peaceful herds grazing at will on the gently sloping hillside.

In these days, when young California was most golden, it was said of this don that he was not only the richest but the cleverest man in the country. To thieve among his cattle was to invite disaster. Infallibly, he caught the culprit, until now he reigned undisputedly over his wealth. No one attempted any more to get the upper hand of him in a bargain. Those who had once been so unfortunate and so conceited as to think they might possibly catch Don Rodrigo napping had come away with the irritating knowledge that by some inconceivable means the don had turned the tables and bested those who had come to best him. Strangely enough, his reputation had made him neither a tyrant nor a bore. He might have been the cleverest man in California, but what was more vital, he was certainly the kindliest. His daughter, Senorita Oriola de Alcazar, would have readily testified to that.

This senorita at present was troubled. Her worry in a nutshell was just this: She had given her heart away, and she was not at all sure that she had given it in the right place. Of course, if was irretrievably gone. There only remained the choice of letting it wander alone, or of hillowing it up in complete surrender.

She left the iron-grilled window, through which was wafting a faint scent of jasmine, as Don Rodrigo came up to her side.

"What shall I do, padre mio?" she asked, turning to the one unfailing source of excellent advice.

"Do you still think of this Senor Pablo de Diego whom you know so little about?" he said, but he was stating a fact rather than asking a question. "Then why do you not wed him? I have found nothing in his records that is displeasing. If it is my consent that you wish, hija querida, pues, you have it."

The senorita closed her small fan slowly. "Your consent, si, gracias. But it is more than that. You, oh, you know what my senor is. He wants me to marry him, but, padre mio, is he kind? I cannot tell. He is so strange, so silent. He says nothing of himself. How can I tell if he will be good to me? How can I tell?"

Don Rodrigo passed his hand gently over his daughter's smooth hair.

"Shall we wait and see?" he suggested, and one could divine that the senorita's happiness was just everything in the world to him.

Sometime during the next week a strange thing occurred on the hem of Don Rodrigo's rancho. At this point the low country narrowed abruptly into a steep canyon flanked on either side by gloomy mountains. The region was a literal home of all the bandits in California. It was the shortest route to Don Rodrigo's hacienda, but people never used it except in an emergency.

Such an emergency was evidently at hand now, for through the dark pass a horse and rider were tearing at breakneck speed. In the rider's pocket rested a brief note: "Come at once. The need is imperative. Don Rodrigo."

One might have noticed that the hand holding the reins was not attempting to take up their slack, but that the hand grasping a pistol meant business. On that pistol a name was cut—Pablo.

In other words, the horse was taking his own unchecked way, while its master attended to things more serious. And, indeed, affairs were not merely serious, but positively perilous. Behind the lone rider, increasing every moment in number, was a whole horde of so-called bad men. The rider, however, was in no immediate danger, for his horse was keeping an equal distance between himself and those following, and that distance was just too long for accurate gunfire.

Suddenly the rider had slipped his gun into its holster and brought a steady pressure to bear on the reins. His keen eyes had caught sight of a small dog ahead that was snared in a trap set for more ferocious game. Don Pablo's hard eyes softened. He knew that to save that one animal would lessen an even chance of life against death to one in 100. Yet he could not leave the terrified little creature to be trampled upon by the crowd of horses in back of him.

Gradually his own horse slowed down to an easy canter. At the exact moment the lone horseman flung one leg to the ground, kept the other still in the stirrup, snatched up the tiny trembling dog, trap and all, and with a hop and a leap was back on his horse. The whole proceeding had taken less than five seconds. But those five seconds brought the riders at his back within bullet range. Had it not been that Don Rodrigo's ranch opened out in front of him, the Senor Pablo de Diego would not have escaped that day. As it was, he left the canyon not a moment too soon. The bandits fired a parting shot and turned back. By degrees, Pablo brought his horse to a halt.

Then to his surprise, not only Don Rodrigo, but Senorita Oriola herself rode out from under a tree. The girl came up to him breathlessly.

"How wonderful that was of you, Pablo!" she exclaimed. "Had it not been for the pobre perro, I would never have known that you could be so kind."

Don Pablo leaned nearer to her. "Then let us thank fate, you and I, for giving me the chance to prove myself."

Don Rodrigo rode between them. "I thing, hija mio," he said wisely, "that you had better thank me. You see, I was the one to place the dog there. He is not actually caught in the trap if you would notice. Only a string tied to one leg, no more. I was the one to put you to the test to see whether you had a heart or no. Fate, nimios, is not so obliging."

And winking slyly, he took the small dog so that a hard brown hand might find the soft, pink fingertips for which it was searching. Very carefully he backed his horse away and started for the hacienda. Senor perro gave a sneezy bark.

Don Rodrigo lifted up a waggly ear and whispered into it. "Me I did not have much doubt. He must have been kind to make my daughter love him. Verdad, perrito?"

At the end of that day, as at the end of other days, Don Rodrigo Vallera de Alcazar was still the cleverest man in California.

RECIPE

MARSHMALLOW FUDGE

By Dorothy Burton, West Hollywood

Candy is one thing that always is welcome in the home, and there is nothing better than to sit down with a good book and a plate of delicious candy near at hand.

The marshmallows in the following recipe help to make the fudge creamy, thus makes it different than the usual "sugary" fudge.

Use: Two cupfuls of sugar.
Two-thirds cupful milk.
One-half cupful cocoa.
One tablespoonful butter.
Speck salt.
One teaspoonful vanilla.
Three-fourths cupful nut meats.

Cook the sugar, cocoa and milk slowly, stirring only until it boils. Cook until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Add butter and remove from fire and let stand until cool. Add the vanilla and beat until the mixture begins to thicken. Add the prepared nuts and marshmallows. Pour at once into well-buttered pan and mark in squares.

English as it is in Paris

In their bid for American and English trade, merchants of Paris are having a struggle with the language. English designate sweaters which go over the head as "pull-overs," and one Paris shop recently advertised "pulowers." The adjoining shop quickly displayed a sign reading "swatters."

LINES FROM THE CHEESE BOX

Sometimes when the supper dishes have been washed and wiped and put away, mother sits down in her little rocking chair, with the sewing basket in her lap, and adorns the holes in our underclothes with patches.
Peggy
curls up in the big arm chair and puts lovely colored stitches upon a gay pink pillow top. And I sit in my long low chair and read out loud from some story book.
Perhaps
it's a funny story and we double over with laughter so often that not much sewing is done. Maybe it's a story of mystery and romance and adventure and the needles fly fast with excitement or are held tensely still while wide-eyed we follow the brave hero from one strange wild danger into another.
I love those quiet evenings and they always rouse in me a sense of pity for the people who rush madly from party to party, worrying over their popularity or their lack of it, trying always to be seen with people of social prominence.
They are pursuing something false and worthless and they are missing the most beautiful thing in life—loving companionship.

WHOLE WHEAT SPONGE CAKE

1 cup Globe "A1" Whole Wheat Flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ teaspoon maple flavoring
4 large eggs
1 cup brown sugar
½ cup chopped walnuts

SIFT the whole wheat flour, measure, add the chopped nuts and mix well. Roll or sift the brown sugar to free it from lumps and slightly pack in cup when measuring. Separate the eggs. (use 5 eggs if they are not large) beat the yolks until light, add the sugar and beat until smooth, add flavoring, (vanilla may be used if preferred) then fold in the flour-nut mixture a little at a time and beat until the mixture is well blended. Add the salt to the egg whites and beat until they are frothy, add the cream of tartar and beat until stiff. Now fold the beaten whites carefully into the batter until evenly blended, then turn into an ungreased tube cake pan and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees) for half an hour, increase heat to 325 degrees and bake 20 to 30 minutes longer. Invert the pan and cool the cake in the pan.

JUST TOWELS

By ALMA WHITAKER

TOWELS may be a lowly item in the progress of civilization, but they are tremendously significant.

Every now and then I become submerged in towels, especially at the beach, don't you know. On the day we are going back to town, for instance. Twenty dirty towels, and eight of 'em wet. So I stow the twelve dry ones in my suitcase and decide to just rinse out the wet ones. But just rinsing doesn't do, so behold me straining for first class laundry ability and reminding myself that if a towel is worth washing at all, it is worth washing well.

Just here I must interpolate, for the benefit of beach cottage hosts, that, where I was warned that visitors would lose or otherwise detach towels from my possession, I find, at the end of the season, I am nine new towels to the good. My friends, you will observe, have mostly brought their own and lost them to me.

With the warning in mind, I had carefully provided old towels at the beach, but those that have accrued to my stock are very stylish fancy towels . . . because nice people nowadays wouldn't think of traveling with any but the best.

As I wash the wet towels, I note many significant bits of evidence . . . dabs of red lipstick, gobs of face-cleansing cream, dry rouge and such like . . . very hard to remove, as the salt water sets the colors firmly.

Dish towels have a scurrilous time of it. The modest six I provided for the cottage wouldn't have lasted long . . . but the world is full of thoughtful female friends with a vast knowledge of the dish-towel situation, so that where guests in town bring candies and flowers and books, behold my beach visitors arriving with nice contributions for the greater hygiene of my kitchen. This likewise is against all the warnings other beach hosts had buried at me, wherefore it is obvious I choose my friends with peculiar discretion.

However, I must not inquire too deeply into the ethics of these visitors of mine. Once in a way I discover I know own towels with tell-tale marks . . . as for instance, one from the Sea Breeze Beach Club, one from the Ambassador Hotel, two with considerable evidence that they had once belonged to the Southern Pacific Railroad. So there you are. Perhaps those hosts who lose towels by the score are the swanky kind that get mistaken for wealthy public institutions.

Every normal woman loves towels, great piles of clean towels. One of the most popular and approved bridal showers is a towel shower. For that matter, lone spinsters galore, living in roominghouses where towels are provided, invariably find a towel sale irresistible and have half a dozen superior towels stowed in the bottom of their trunks, against the day when they can set up housekeeping on their own. Towels of their very own help to give them a domestic balance. When "we all" traveled around, living in tents and ox wagons in South Africa, my mother could always turn the tent into home by spreading out her best towels. So long as we had plenty of nice towels, we were still in touch with civilization.

I went to the birthday party of a young actress lately. Everyone brought perfumes, face powder, vanity cases, and such like trifles regarded as suitable to her profession. I, having as usual, forgotten to purchase a present, took a couple of embroidered towels, useless dainties which I hadn't been able to resist at a sale some time before, although only the most substantial kind are of any use in my practical household. That girl gloated over them and knew that I alone had read her soul-hunger for domesticity. Until then she had decided to eschew matrimony until her professional status was secure, but right after the towel gift she started a "bottom drawer" just like any home-keeping maiden.

Towels were a significant and precious possession even when they were plain white and comparatively unbeautiful. Now that they appear in gorgeous colorings to match every bathroom, some of them huge and gay, large enough for beach robes, the normal female passion for towels has increased almost to the obsession point. I, for instance, insist upon presenting my men folk with fancy towels on birthdays and other gift anniversaries, in the full knowledge that they will merely add to my own social prestige. Anyone who sees the males of my household sporting those magnificent towels promptly realizes that I must be a superior person.

Men have no towel reverence. They will, without the slightest sense of guilt, wipe their shoes on the handsomest towels. That's why hotels everywhere automatically provide a shoe rag in the bathrooms. Through the ages women have been trying to induce males with a proper respect for towels, without making the slightest impression. For which reason, the moment visitors' backs are turned, any normal woman in the office will snatch up the best towels and substitute the second best for the men to really use. Only recently I had learned my males the towels I had given them to show off on the beach with, and nearly had heart failure when I discovered them wiping their tarry feet on them! One of the sorrows of life is having to pretend one doesn't mind when the towels are being treated shamefully when company is present.

Many a housekeeper who is stingy and fussy about towels at home, trying to make the family do out one a week each, will wallow in reckless towel using at hotels, where they give one several clean ones every day. "Good heavens," I will remark at home, "ten towels in the wash this week and we haven't had any visitors either. What do you boys think you are doing . . . using up towels like that." But watch me use up the entire supply for a double suite in any hotel I happen to stay at . . . with the utterly sumptuous knowledge that they are going to be changed every day and the laundry bill is no affair of mine.

The male of the species is a natural menace to towels. I am prepared to wager that 99 per cent of the housekeeping women of the world are using up frightful energy trying to protect towels from irreverent males. Every so often the thing gets into the divorce courts, when the wife, appealing to a male judge, will sob that her cruel spouse invariably washes his hands on the towels instead of with soap and water. Any woman judge would concede a divorce on such a complaint, but when it's a male judge the wife has to trump up all sorts of extra complaints to get relief. Many a wife who has made her plea of "cruelty," really meant that her spouse was cruel to the towels. I know one couple who will surely get into court soon . . . the husband cleaned the car, washed his hands imperfectly and wiped them on the best towels, just put out for company. And mind you, he is just an ordinary fellow. A husband must be so dashingly attractive and romantic to get away with a crime like that. But there you are again, dashing romantic husbands almost never clean the car. However, when one does find such an one, the angel man would surely wash his hands extra well and carefully use a second-best towel to dry them on. That's almost the only way a dashing romantic husband can remain dashing and romantic, domestically speaking.

I recall an utterly fortunate occasion when I found a towel, a good one, out in the garage. It was almost beyond recognition as a respectable towel. My relief was tempered with a dire sympathy when I found the towel belonged to a neighbor and that her spouse, not mine, was guilty. I know now she is gallantly hiding dark sorrows behind her comely charms. As I watch her long line of handsome white towels on the line in the garden every Monday, well I know she is living in a fool's paradise.

Overcome
ITCHY SCALP
...a forerunner of baldness

AN itching scalp means that the baldness producing germ is at work—gradually and painlessly leading you to complete hairless. You must rid your scalp of this germ to prevent baldness and re-grow the hair which you have already lost.

To insure the complete extermination of this baldness producing germ within the shortest possible time, consult The Thomas', World's Leading Hair and Scalp Specialists. Do not gamble with general cure-all remedies which merely dissolve surface dandruff and spread the germs over a wider surface.

The 16-year proved Thomas' treatment goes to the source of YOUR own specific trouble. It is the most perfect method known to modern science for stopping falling hair, eliminating the baldness producing germ and dandruff, and growing hair on the thin and bald spots.

YOU, too, can have a good head of hair. Call at the nearest Thomas' office today for a free scalp examination, and learn what this reliable treatment is doing for others and what it can do for YOU.

ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are all unsatisfactory, noticeably because everyone's foot is different and the demand for individual points and personal attention completely negatives mass production methods. Dr. Scholl's Arch Supports expressly fill further. We make no other than to accommodate ourselves to the peculiarities of each foot after there is a correction. In order to obtain these results by the wearing of the supports. In order to give the relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be rested in an upright position on the floor. Let us examine your feet and tell you frankly whether or not you can be benefited. Let us show you actual cases of deformities of the foot, and see also those cases where our methods combined with our supports have overcome the disorder. It is not necessary to wear clothes when we examine your feet. We also make supports for the ankles, and other parts of the body. Consultation and advice free.

"Nutty" Diets and Diet "Nuts!"

To one specializing in diet, the freaks and oddities that are practiced make an interesting sidelight to the day's doings.

Scarcely a day elapses but that I do not have presented to me some freak or "nut" idea with mystically magic powers, ranging from tubercular cure-alls to fallen-arch correctives.

The other day a sweet and dear Italian lady gave me her idea of diet remedies which she has faithfully applied to her children who are now all grown up.

When they had an earache, she put in some olive oil. When their stomach "went bad," she gave pure olive oil. When they were constipated, they got olive oil in undiluted doses. If they had skin eruptions, they received more olive oil.

For spring cleaning, instead of the midwestern sulphur and molasses, make it olive oil between meals in special doses.

A doctor whom I know has beaten the accomplishments of Aladdin's lamp with grape juice and pork chops.

A woman friend of mine has healed herself of everything but the "pip" with a raw food diet, consisting mainly of carrots, lettuce, raisins and eggs.

Another finds that his strength comes from eating strong foods and oh, how strong! I have never seen him yet but that his heavy purchases of garlic and onions were not self-evident!

A patient of mine is firmly convinced that one needs lots of pepper, chili sauces, sugar and salt to make rich, red blood!

Another, endowed by inheritance with a fine physique and large muscles, knows that it is because, Englishlike, he has consumed liberal quantities of lean beef!

A scientist gentleman I know has convinced himself positively that he cannot do clear thinking unless he has two or three cups of coffee.

A German mother is convinced that she could have nursed her third baby better if she had only had the Munich lager which she was fortunate enough to have with her first baby!

An antiprohibitionist I know is ever ready and willing to argue the question of gin's being the finest of all medicines for everything from snake bite to pneumonia!

And so on the merry tale goes, each having his own particular dogmas to which he sticks with a positivity and a certainty that brooks neither reasoning nor diminution!

I shall not say, as the Quaker, that "all sorts of things are necessary to humanity, else the Lord would never have made them," but I shall say that it is essentially artistic in its nature. It is a necessary part of life.

Brain Tumor

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Will you be so kind as to describe a brain tumor, its symptoms, length of time one suffers and above all, what can be done to alleviate the suffering?

Thank you most sincerely for the help your column has offered in the past.

A READER.

If we are true physicians, it sometimes hurts to the quick to be compelled to sit idly by and watch death take its toll. We may minister to the needs of the sick as much as is within our power—yet beyond a certain point we are helpless.

When I see a case with a positive diagnosis of brain tumor, the only thing that can be done is to cheer up the friends and relatives and let nature take its course.

Frankly, there is not much which can be done—if anything at all. I have never known of a successful operation for it. In fact, the only merit of the operation is that it brings a more speedy termination to life—a desideratum for which the patient would be thankful.

What need to go into a studied group of symptoms for this trouble? They will vary in the early stages from slight headache and pain to unconsciousness, paralysis of any or all parts of the body, blindness, and so forth. In some cases the ailments develop slowly and may last for months. In others, the onset is quick. Sometimes an X-ray will show it.

I know of no way in which it can be stopped when once developed. I know of no way in which it can be removed.

Brain tumor is one of the most unfortunate types of diseases and to my knowledge, we can do nothing but make the patient as comfortable as we can, lessen the burdens that are inevitably to appear and let it go at that.

That Mystic Melody

Some day I may learn how to play
That mystic melody
That fills my dreams until it seems Enchanted I must be.
The joy it brings on muted strings,
Whose wistful tones relay
The echoes from all Tara's walls,
In Erin, far away.
Its soothing strain and sweet refrain
Envelop me with bliss
That fills my head until I dread
Its lilting tune I'll miss.
For I adore its haunting score,
Elusive as a fay.
Some day I may learn how to play
That mystic melody.

Some day I may learn how to play
That mystic melody
That cheers my soul so I extol
Its witching harmony.
For when I muse its airs diffuse
A phantom symphony,
With cadence apt that holds me rapt,
Enthused by passion's sway.
Its vibrant fire my moods inspire,
A myriad themes to test,
With lyric lines whose sense defines
My mind's esthetic quest,
That finds its vent in love's lament,
Or wanton ecstasy.
Some day I may learn how to play
That mystic melody.

Dieting and Fasting Injurious Diet Never Cured Anything

Read This Letter From the County Hospital

County Hospital, Los Angeles, Ward 220

"Received the package of O & M Tablets; results in 24 hours. No pain, no vomit; first time in six months that I held food one hour. Before, milk would sour and curdle in ten minutes and I could not retain it. Can eat anything now. Hungry, feel like a new man. No headache, pain or gas on stomach. When I come to Pasadena I want to see you. I was told I had gastric catarrh, far advanced. I put down under their diet."

A later letter from this same hospital patient says: "I am getting regularly, and I have had no return of the trouble. I am telling everybody about the tablets and my doctor says he is prescribing them for his other patients."

DON'T DIET OR FAST! O & M TABLETS will help to digest your food and give needed rest and stimulation to the stomach.

If you have stomach trouble, gas, acid condition, kidney or bladder irritation, try O & M Tablets.

When you take O & M Tablets you are taking the identical tablet which helped to build up the reputation of one of the greatest stomach and kidney specialists in the United States. This formula, is now owned by the universally known Old Mission Laboratories of Pasadena, Calif.

Let the diet fanatics do the dieting and fasting. You take something for your stomach and kidneys.

If your kidneys are poisoning you, see what a week's trial will do. It will certainly please you to see how quickly the tablets clean out the kidneys and stop bladder trouble.

A good cleaning out of the kidneys may be all that is necessary. You can see that O & M Tablets are helping the kidneys almost from the first dose. Frequent rising up at night is often completely stopped with one tablet. Neuritis and rheumatism come from bad kidneys (kidney poisoning). In such cases, take the tablets for at least a week. You should be able to see the real benefit from them in that time.

The tablets act so thoroughly in stomach and digestive troubles that you need no laxatives when you take them. One of the greatest tablets ever made for stomach and kidneys.

One week's trial proves their value. Send this notice with 10c to Old Mission Laboratories, Pasadena, Calif., and they will send you a 5-day

JUST TOWELS

By ALMA WHITAKER

SEEN FROM the Green Verdugo HILLS

In a mountain camp we found a man reading Homer. So, we stopped awhile to talk with him. It is not a usual thing to find a man reading Homer and yet there is always some one to read the deathless sagas which the father of all poets wove out of visions as he wandered blind and a beggar through Greece in the long ago.

Only That Endures Which the World Needs

Only that endures, which the world needs. And so, Homer endures. Generation after generation handed down his great, thunderous poems from father to son, from lip to lip, through centuries before ever the printing press or movable type were invented. The world's soul and the world's heart needed Homer. Wherefore, Homer endures.

The same way with the Bible. The inspired Word endures. Wars and conflagrations swept the nations of the earth, pestilence, famine and blood wrought their havoc, yet the Scriptures endured and will continue to endure because the world has need of them.

Two thousand years ago a Wanderer trod the dusty roads of Galilee healing the sick, making the blind to see, raising the dead. But, most of all, preaching a new commandment of Love. He voiced the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

And so, Christ endures and will continue to endure. Every moment of time His name is spoken. He walks before men now as He did in Caesar's day. The world needed Him then and needs Him still—now more than ever.

And so, Christ endures.

Conductor, the letter said, I am seventy-eight years of age, bed-ridden for the past two years, and I must soon go. I would like to see you before I go.

If Not Now Maybe Some Other Time

That's what the letter said. A letter that tugged at our heartstrings. A letter from an old lady whose soul is poised for its flight beyond the tracery of the stars to that Other Country from which no traveler returns.

It may be that we shall not be able to see her before she goes, much as we would like to do so. The petty things of life so tether a man from doing the things he would wish to do.

And so, Sister, if we fail to see you now, let us hope that it will be some other time.

Remember us when you are in the Kingdom. And when you walk in the fields of asphodel beside the still waters.

Then, some day, when through God's vast mercy, we are also there, we shall have a nice little visit together, to begin with, and see each other often after that in the happy years that have no end.

When the Millionaires' Club of Contentment and Happiness met on the stone fence in the Green Verdugo Hills, lately, an emissary from the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises in the roaring town appeared, asking for the privilege of the floor for the purpose of making a statement.

Pride Is Bad and False Pride Worse

The request was gladly granted. The Millionaires' Club is always ready to lend a sympathetic ear to other folks' troubles, not having any troubles of its own. They have grown wise, these gray men of the hills. They have come to know that to worry over the troubles of this world is foolish and futile. They take each day as it comes and leave the rest to God.

"All their trust on Him is stayed,
All their help from Him they bring."

What the emissary from the roaring town wanted was the indorsement of the Millionaires' Club of the movement to change the name of the County Poor Farm to something else.

According to the emissary it is considered a disgrace on any one to have to go to the Poor House. And he argued that if the institution were conducted under some other appellation, folks would not mind it so much. It seemed that the psychology of it is something like calling a person a "story teller" instead of coming right out plain and calling him a liar.

Well, sir, the members of the Millionaires' Club were, to the last man, profoundly shocked by the proposal. It was quite some time before they were able to recover from their amazement and put themselves in a state of mind to discuss the matter calmly.

But, after awhile, the man who has the phonograph spoke up. No matter what new name the place is given it will still be the Poor House, will it not? he asked.

The emissary replied that he supposed it would, but that by changing the name the feelings of the inmates would not be hurt, and their pride would not be assailed.

So, now that the cards were on the table, as the saying is, the Millionaires took the proposition under full advisement and patient discussion, arriving in due time at a complete decision which was entirely satisfactory, as far as they were concerned. It was pointed out to the emissary that, in the first place, it is no disgrace to be poor. And that to think otherwise is merely to be snobbish, after all.

The most wondrous personage this world has ever seen was so poor that His hands never knew the touch of a coin. He was a homeless Wanderer—Jesus of Nazareth. Homer was a beggar. Oliver Goldsmith played his flute for pennies on dusty highways. Robert Burns barely escaped a pauper's grave.

Wherefore, said the man who has the phonograph, whoever is poor can claim to be in good company. So many of the immortals were poor.

Maybe it was because mention was made of Oliver Goldsmith that our neighbor, the man who plays the flute, put in a word. No doubt, he said, there are many people at the County Poor Farm with whom it would be no disgrace to associate. People whom ill-fortune has crippled with its pitiless arrows. And, he said, no man can be sure of lasting success. No one knows when the ground may be cut from under him.

Finally, the emissary from the roaring town was told that if the members of the Millionaires' Club of Contentment and Happiness in the green Verdugo Hills were compelled by any turn of the wheel to enter the portals of the Poor House they would go valiantly, holding their heads high, and with never a blush of shame on their faces.

"Pride goeth before a fall," they said. It was pride that lost Lucifer his commission as captain of the heavenly hosts. And that there is only one thing more than pride. And that is false pride.

There awhile back, one starry night, we were reading the published reminiscences of a physician of the roaring town. It was a quiet night in the hills. An ideal night to dwell with the world's memories. And with old dreams that time has folded away.

As Old Time Medicine Man Made Good

So, in this publication that we are talking about, we came across the biography of an old-time doctor who had abandoned medicine for religion, but who, when he did so, was able to give a great account of himself. In a newspeper printed fourscore years ago he published the following announcement:

"Am sorry to inform the public that as the Reformed New Testament Church has unanimously conferred upon me the office of bishop, deacon and defender of the faith of said apostolic church, it is inconvenient for me any longer to practice my physical system. My family medical instructor is now ready for the press, containing my three physical systems, in about 200 pages and fifty plates of the human body. It will likewise contain a list of 5000 patients that I have had under treatment in the course of fifteen years practice, from the port of San Diego to that of San Francisco. Out of this large number only four have died while under my treatment. I publish this for the purpose of getting out of practice."

Well, sir, when we had read this remarkable statement, we said to ourself that here was a doctor that even the Chinese might boast of.

Let anyone in the Synagogue anywhere between Dan and Beersheba tell us, if he can, any other doctor in the world who, at any time in history, lost only four patients.

We wonder if in his subsequent career as a bishop, a deacon and defender of the faith he saved as many souls as he saved bodies?

Maybe not. Because the biography states that "he hated San Francisco and Catholics." And a soul-saver, we would think, must not hate anything or anybody.

As a Christian teacher this wonderful old doctor missed the mark if he failed to learn that the religion of Christ is based on love. And on love alone.

TODAY

What did I see today? I saw the sun
Rise in his glory, his long course begun.
I saw a dew-drop in a flower's cup
From which a humming bird had paused to sup.
I saw some sleeping cattle on a hill;
And at its foot I saw a rippling rill
Run murmuring on upon its unknown way:
And, yes, I earlier saw the break of day—
That slow awakening as the creeping light
Drives back the shadows of retreating night.
And with its growing radiance glorifies
The shining earth and the refulgent skies.

I saw the noon-tide hour when labor stops
Its strident steps and hunger's wants allays.

I saw the gathering shadows from the West
Lie like a benison upon earth's breast.
And then I saw night gather—and the world
In a vast universal rest unfurled.

I saw today, and every day have seen,
God guiding nature on its way serene.

CARE OF THE BODY

in real life bursitis, with its stiff knee, is certainly not in that category. It is a painful and crippling disease that affects men and women usually past the middle period of life.

In its nature, it is essentially arthritis except that it is usually confined to the limited area of the bursa of the knee. Hence its name.

The anatomical construction of the knee, its cap and the joint between the thigh bones with the leg bones is such that it becomes an easy depository for the accumulation of fluid. These fluids are generally of an irritant nature, sufficient to cause inflammation and swelling.

It is because of this anatomical oddity that the least bump or injury will create an inflammation that becomes very difficult to cure.

"Water on the knee" is another common expression for the trouble. It may be found with gout. It is a concurrent symptom of arthritis. It is present with the common-place rheumatism.

Its causes are to be found in the same factors which are responsible for other troubles associated with it. Sometimes an injury may be the exciting reason. Most of the time, however, it just comes gradually, slowly and insidiously. A pain or twang is felt. We limp a bit. The inflammation becomes more severe and a definite swelling is established.

This is the essence of the preliminary symptoms. The true causes are the self-same elements which are responsible for most of the other diseases—a previous history of toxemia, the eating of foods unfit for consumption and drugs which should not have been used.

Fortunately, it usually wears out on its own. Sometimes we must assist it. We can relieve the pain very nicely by the application of hot packs. If we add some alkali to it such as Epsom salts or baking soda, we neutralize the inflammation and irritation.

That is the essence of the hot mineral springs treatment—the application of hot salt and water. Mineral springs, however, or hot mineral packs are alleviative agents only. The cure must be intrinsic, in the blood stream. The diet must be sharply revised so that it becomes predominatingly fruits and vegetables—the more of them unfired, the better.

Liberal quantities of distilled or demineralised water must be used.

Sweating and exposing the affected area to heat are old remedies, but invariably they are effective.

Passive exercise helps but better yet is a deep, vigorous kneading massage, not directly over the joint but two or three inches away, gradually encroaching toward the painful area as circulation becomes increased.

In the very severe stages it is necessary to immobilize the knee—that is, either put a stiff splint, bandage over the joint, or where the patient is bedridden, keep the foot elevated at right angles to the body.

Basically, however, unless the diet factors are altered, the disease itself will seldom yield. If it does, it runs for a long period of time before results are forthcoming.

Abdominal Binders

Contrasting the average young woman today with her mother of yesteryear, the odds of common sense in dress are decidedly in favor of the modern flapper. We may say what we like about her morals, her lack of respect, and so on, but on this subject, I think, she towers infinitely superior to her mother of the last generation.

Her breasts are loose and permitted a better development than the tight brassieres of fifteen years ago. Her abdominal muscles are compelled to do the work that corsets sustained. Her skirts are shorter. There is a greater freedom of circulation. The air currents can reach her body. Her skin is in better health. She does not suffer as much from the usual skin ailments.

All of these are to her advantage.

Even recently when the Parisian edict went forth that skirts were to be lengthened, I see that she successfully resisted an attempt on her freedom.

I take my hat off to such a flapper and wish her every success in the maintenance of her dress independence!

Indigestion

Off with the old—on with the new!"

No, I am not speaking of automobiles nor clothes!

Even in our aches and pains, our labels must change with our fashions or with our economic status.

What is your income?

If it is under two thousand a year, you are suffering from a simple "bellyache," a by-product of your gluttony and too many candies, fried foods, coffees, starches and sweets!

If you are in the five-thousand-a-year class, then your stomach must be made to live up to your social status. Ill betide the doctor who happens to tell you that you have a "bellyache!" Then it is "nervous indigestion," a much more fashionable disease and one that can command twice the fee!

But suppose you are lucky enough to be in the ten-thousand-a-year class. Then you can afford the higher priced fees and higher priced doctors and diagnoses!

"What are the symptoms then?" you are asked. "Pain after eating? Gas?"

Ulcer, at least! Nothing will do but three months in a sanatorium with a day and night nurse!

I wonder how many testimonials I could get from you who read this this Sunday morning. I am curious to know how many would attest to the quality of their diagnosis and the merits of their treatment.

You poor $1000 a year patient, what did you say the clinic gave you? A big bottle full of a salty substance?

Surely—Epsom salts! A few good healthy bowel movements and you are okay again!

And you, the five-thousand-a-year sufferer, what did you get?

Remember, your "tummy" must get a five-thousand-a-year treatment and you cannot accept a one-thousand-a-year standard for your better grade "tum-tum!"

You received a green bottle with special typewritten instructions to take a dose three times daily after your meals. Somehow or other, it tasted like licorice and cascara, but you must never deny that you are receiving high-tone treatment!

And now, you ten-thousand-a-year "tummy," you get two different kinds of powders—a white tasteless one and another salty one! You also get an elaborate diet list on which milk is the predominating item. You must have fresh

BUNIONS

We have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have ever reason to believe it will correct nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

WHAT'S NEW IN SCIENCE

Conducted by Ransome Sutton

Using Both Sides of Brain Will Produce Super-Man, Says Physiologist—World's Largest Electrical Condenser Being Built for Southern California—Increase of Flesh and Wool Produced by Transplanting Additional Gland—Daylight and Bird Migration

Ambicerebralism

WE HAVE two-sided brains, but do all our thinking, it is said, on just one side. Right-handed people use the left cerebrum, left-handed people the one on the right side. So we are like those antique two-cylinder cars, with one cylinder out of order. Now, if we could start the idle cylinder going, would our body-machines work twice as well as under the single-cylinder plan?

J. A. Boriase, a profound physiologist, and George Egan, a civil engineer who is more interested in the pons-bridge between the two sides of the brain than in any other kind of a bridge, both answer this question affirmatively. "We are only half as efficient as we should be." Mr. Boriase insists earnestly and quite convincingly. "If we could use both hemispheres equally well, we would promptly emerge from manhood into super-manhood. And Dr. Franz, of the University of California at Los Angeles, has shown that when parts of the brain ordinarily used have been destroyed, other parts can be taught to function for the destroyed parts."

An account of Dr. Shepherd Franz's experiments was published on this page July 13 last. After teaching cats tricks, he removed the area in their brains which responded to the teaching, then succeeded in educating other areas—blank to learning previously—to perform the same tricks. Boriase and Egan go much further; they say that, without injuring the side of the cerebrum normally used, the unused side can be educated to function capably. As proof of the statement, they point to themselves, for they have learned to use their left hands just as dexterously as their right hands. Ambicerebralism means more than ambidexterity, however; it means using both hemispheres of the brain. To be ambicerebral, the left hand should be able to do everything the right hand can do—in reverse order. Stand in front of a mirror and try to shave the back of your neck, if you wish to see how instinctively right-handed you are. Our civilization, Boriase contends, is a right-handed civilization. Since a mirror reverses everything—turns right hands into left hands and left eyes into right eyes—he thinks the best way to begin educating the blank side of our brains is to practice before a mirror; or, what amounts to the same thing, to draw pictures, work examples, or write letters, all with the left hand, which will look natural when seen in a mirror. (One such example has been reproduced, together with a few lines of writing. So right-eyed have we become that it takes a mirror to translate left-handed figures and letters to right-eyed minds.) Mr. Boriase also thinks a left-handed typewriter would arouse the interest and afford instruction to the ignorant half of the brain.

"When the unused side acquires dexterity," he says, "we can give either side a rest by shifting to the other, thus shortening, if not eliminating, the time devoted to sleep. Experimenting on myself, I worked right-handedly from morning until four in the afternoon, day after day, then switched to left-handedness and worked examples until 3 a.m., and got along with only three and one-half hours of sleep. It's brain-fatigue that makes us sleepy, and by shifting to the rested side we give the sleepy side a rest."

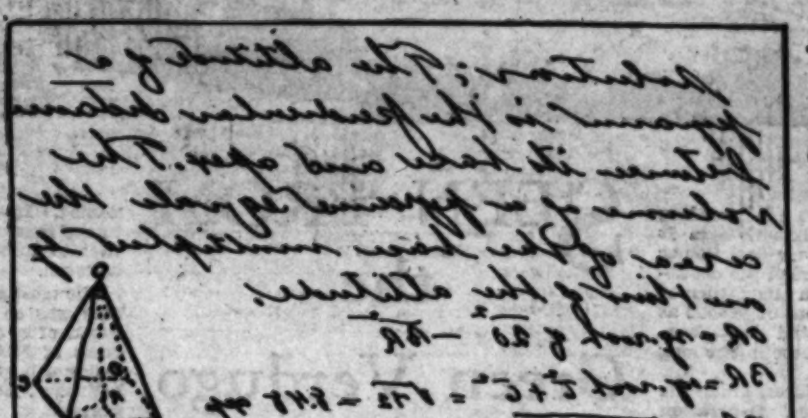
Untrained dumb animals, according to Mr. Boriase, are "ambidextrous," for jungle cats and snakes and hyenas snap right or left with equal knack. Even a domestic cat will claw at a dog without pausing an instant to decide which paw to use. But when told that bulls in an arena use one horn more than the other: "That's because they've been trained," he replied, "and where training begins one-sided education starts."



Solution of one of the Edison examination problems, written and figured by Jack Boriase with his left hand.

It is true that young bulls are trained for fighting in the arenas. And a left-horned bull is a terror to toreros. While the banderillas are being placed and the picadores and capeadores are doing their stunts, the matador stands back of the bulwarks studying the mannerisms of the enraged beast which he will have to face alone. Is it right-eyed or left-eyed, right-horned or left-horned? Does it charge with flose on ground, or with head held high? On the ranches bulls are trained to behave as they do. An infuriated young bull, for example, is trained to charge a dummy suspended from a tree, and soon acquires the habit of "horning high." Likewise horses learn to pull on the "gee" and "haw" side of a wagon tongue. "But all such habits," says Mr. Boriase, "are the result of education. Whichever side of the cerebrum the instruction first reaches, that is the side which finally becomes educated, and in mankind the pathway between the sense organs and the part of the left cerebrum wherein concepts are formed has become hereditary. It shunts all sensations to the left cerebral hemisphere."

Whether complete ambicerebralism is possible or not, this much physiologists and psychologists know; only a small area on one side of the human cerebrum thinks abstract thoughts. Having a big brain in which only small areas are used is like owning a large ranch with only a few patches under cultivation.

Glands and Growth

DR. SERGE VORONOFF, now visiting in California after six months of research work among the sheep herds of India and Indo-China, says: "I found that by transplanting a third genital gland into a lamb it was possible to increase its flesh some twenty-five pounds and its wool two and one-half pounds. We take glands from slaughtered animals and graft them into young animals several weeks after birth. The process works as well with cattle and swine as with sheep."

Why Birds Migrate

IT IS daylight, rather than the weather, that controls the migratory instincts of birds, according to Dr. William Rowan of the University of Alberta. Releasing flocks of crows from aviaries, wherein the lighting effects of shortening days had been reproduced, he found that they migrated south at the same time that other crows were starting north. The migratory instinct, he concluded, must therefore be governed by glandular secretions, which are activated by the intensity and length of daylight.

This condenser is but two-fifths the size of the monster one now under construction for Southern California.

Prodigious Power Developments

THE world's largest "totally-inclosed, hydrogen-cooled synchronous condenser" is being built by the General Electric Company for outdoor installation at the La Fresa substation of the Southern California Edison Company. Its ratings are: 50,000 kilovolt-amperes, 13,200 volts, 600 revolutions per minute, three phases, fifty cycles.

It looks like a monstrous motor: fifteen feet high, sixteen feet wide, thirty-one feet long, weighing 400,000 pounds. This rotating machine has nothing to do with the generation of power. According to Albert H. Webb, of the General Electric Company in Los Angeles: "It merely improves the quality of the electricity served to consumers by neutralizing some of the wattless currents caused by induction motors and other things along the lines."

Wattless currents are about as popular among power producers as cinch-bugs among wheat growers. They cannot be made to do useful work, nor can the companies derive any revenue from them, because they refuse to register on a wattmeter. Always present, however, they clutter up the lines and obstruct the orderly movements of domesticated horsepower electricity. Condensers neutralize these troublesome wattless currents, then the spider web system of distribution wire-ways, cleared of obstructions, will carry heavier loads of working current. In a big way such condensers do what little condensers do in radio sets—clear the lines of idlers so the working electrons may stream straight on to their jobs.

Electrical condensation is hot work. Even the machinery would burn up unless cooled. In this huge condenser, hydrogen gas keeps the hard-working machinery cool. For the condensing machine operates inside of an air-tight explosive-proof cylinder filled with hydrogen gas. The hydrogen gets hot, but it will not take fire, so fires are impossible inside the cylinder. In this condenser, however, the heat absorbed by the hydrogen is tempered by four internal "surface-type" coolers, consisting of nests of water-supplied pipes, through which the gas is fanned, then the cooled gas goes back into the machine again.

The advantages of hydrogen cooling are numerous. Being lighter than air, all kinds of machines work more efficiently in it than in heavier gases, the "wind resistance" loss being only one-tenth as great as the loss in air. But a greater advantage, especially from the viewpoint of the public, is the safety and silence of these huge machines; totally inclosed in an air-tight cylinder filled with a noninflammable gas, they can be operated in residential districts where other machines would be objectionable.

A vast amount of research work has been done in this field, and the condenser now under construction embodies the results of those researches—in gigantic form. The condenser pictured on this page is only two-fifths as large as the one being built for Southern California. In all ways, it seems, man is harnessing the forces of nature and more efficiently.

CARE OF THE BODY

the earth and the stimulating effect of the morning and evening dew, plus, of course, sound common sense on diet and the heroic eliminative measures that Father Kneipp invoked, rebuilt the Emperor so that he lived to a ripe old age, dying during the World War.

This is an incidental story of the value of barefootedness. What I want to point out is its use in therapy in the treatment of common diseases.

Undoubtedly, however, when one starts as an adult and has never adapted the feet to the earth, the skin is tender and there is a great susceptibility to infestation by parasites.

The best known of such infestations is unquestionably hookworm in the South, where the poor white and colored population cannot afford to buy shoes.

Then we have a complication of undernourishment, bad soil conditions and skin sensitivity unless they have been adapted for many years.

"Athlete's foot," or what is commonly known as "athlete's foot," could come in the same category of troubles.

There is no question but that if one is not adapted to barefootedness, precautions should be followed.

No farmer would think of going about in his stables barefoot. The possibility of the animal exudate getting into the blood stream and causing tetanus is too well known.

In my advice to mothers concerning barefootedness for children, I have again and again told them that the ideal place for their children to run around is not on a hardwood or cement floor. My own children run around barefoot freely but usually on a grass lawn or on the beach sands.

Under such conditions there is practically no danger of "athlete's foot" or any other infection, nor for that matter is there any danger present in any other clean environment.

The physical conditions of cement or hardwood floors are such that they would tend toward flatfootedness rather than an infestation.

If infection does occur the only thing to do is to treat it the same as any other ordinary infection.

Foot Sores

The shoes are too tight. A blister forms. A sore develops. Barefoot, we stub our toe. The toe is injured and a sore develops.

From a hundred different causes injuries to the feet occur. When they do, they should be considered much more seriously than a wound or a bruise in any other part of the body.

It is not enough to paint it over with a little iodine or mercurochrome. It is not enough to put on a bandage, put the stocking over that, the shoe on top of that and let it go.

I could not quote accurate figures but I don't think I would be very wrong in saying that a foot sore is ten times more liable to blood poisoning than an injury or a bruise to any other part of the body. Our habits of life tend to make it so.

The cleanest of us changes stockings no more than once a day. With many, there is considerable perspiration discharge or odorous exudate. With still more, the stockings are not adequately laundered. They certainly are never a substitute for clean, sterile gauze.

Then come the physical factors of constant friction and irritation.

Where a wound would heal in two weeks in any other part of the body, I have seen what looked like comparatively harmless sores go on for months and months.

If you suffer an injury to any part of the foot, it is of the utmost importance that you apply ten times more cleanliness than if you had injured any other part of the body.

If you wish, follow the customary regime of applying an antiseptic or germkiller.

My humble opinion is that most of them, germ-killers, are valueless. Use soap, water, cleanliness, and see your doctor. Medicine, psychology and fun, per some, are festivenesses. However, I have no objection to your applying them if you like. They may make you feel better but don't think you are at once immune merely because you have poured something on.

The next and most important thing is to keep it clean day in and day out. Two baths a day may not be enough. Wash it four, five and six times. But it must be kept clean!

Then prevent irritation. Apply a piece of sterile gauze directly over the wound. Lubricate it with vaseline or olive oil, if you like, to prevent its sticking to the clot. Then apply a pad of soft absorbent cotton between the gauze and either the stocking or shoe.

If the injury is severe, don't make the mistake of trying to wear your normal shoes. Sacrifice a pair of shoes by cutting them away rather than take a chance.

If you have diabetes or even suspect it, your precautions on foot injury should be doubled. Then, for the slightest injury or ailment, wear neither shoes nor stockings. You should stay at home and expose the injured area to the sunshine until it is completely healed.

The diabetic's ability to heal is almost destroyed, while the gangrenous infections which take place are exceedingly likely.

With sensible care of this nature, with rigid cleanliness, sun baths and freedom from irritation, most foot injuries heal very well.

Bursitis

Fullerton, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I am a married woman forty-seven years of age. I am very active, do my housework and take care of the yard and garden.

Two months ago my right knee was swollen and stiff. It was painful when I attempted to bend it. At other times it wasn't a bit sore.

I went to a physician and had a thorough examination. The doctor didn't find a single thing the matter with me. I then went to a dentist and he didn't find any trouble.

The right knee is better now. It is swollen a little and still a little stiff. However, the left knee is getting stiff.

What do you think is the cause and what do you advise me to do

Thank you for a reply. A READER.

On the comic opera stage when the comedian desires to illustrate "rheumatiz," he invariably depicts it as an affection of the knee. He limps, straddles or distorts himself in some other fashion.

This may be funny in comic opera but which can be eaten the way old Mother Nature makes them.

CARE OF THE BODY

The funny part about a place of this sort is that it is not frequented by the "nuts" or freaks who are literally on their last legs or dying of disease. Some of the most substantial and solid business men and women of the city visit there.

Best yet is the educational propaganda which is dispensed with the meals. One takes a forkful of salad and glances up at the wall where one sees some Walt Mason stuff like this: "When liver and kidneys are way out of step, tomatoes and parsley will furnish the pep."

To those who do not like greens, they are refreshed with "A dish of fresh greens served with nuts once a day will keep all diseases and dopers away."

For the novice who is looking in and who wants to change over, we are regaled: "You ate yourself sick on cooked food you desired; now eat yourself well on the food that's unfired."

If sniffiers happen to stray in, a tit-bit for them is "Cooked sweets and cooked starch are the cause of catarrh; and this when prolonged must man's youthfulness mar."

This is by way of the diners who, if they cannot complain about the food, can at least say something about the "punk" poetry.

Anyhow, it's an interesting place to visit.

Goiter

Our text-books say that goiter is a disease of metabolism. This may not mean much to the average sufferer. He doesn't care much who the fellow, metabolism, may be!

Perhaps a little explanation may be apropos.

Metabolism means the body's ability to build up its cells and get rid of its wastes. In other language, metabolism is a disturbed ratio of building or carrying off of the wastes.

"What has goiter to do with it?" you may ask.

The thyroid gland—the organ affected in goiter—has something to do with this systemic metabolism.

Continuing our reasoning:

If the thyroid gland is disturbed by our metabolic processes, the reasons for the disturbance must come from something we do in our emotional, sexual, dietetic or physical life.

Of these, the one requiring the most correction pertains to the food we consume. Nothing will upset synthetic metabolism as quickly and as thoroughly as consistent mistakes in diet.

When we consider the colossal demineralization that occurs in the daily menu of the average American, it is astonishing why we do not have more goiter.

The metabolism of most is upset from one source or another either through mineral starvation or insufficient discharge of wastes.

This, of course, should give you a clew as to the correction of goiter and indirectly, the restoration of normal metabolism.

Give the thyroid gland organic minerals and vitamines. That's the whole thing in a nutshell. You will find these food ingredients in no better place than in all of the fruits and vegetables. You will find them least in meats—none in coffees—none in sugars and very few, indeed, in the refined starches.

If the trouble lay only in our failing to give us the mineral alkaline balance but it robs the minerals already there.

Everytime I see a person suffering with goiter, I know there has been mineral and vitamine starvation.

Demineralization applies as well to the way we process our food.

If you like your vegetables "New England" boiled, you will suffer from mineral starvation even though you consume vegetables in unstinted quantities.

If you like your foods "crisp fried," the vitamines won't do you much good. They are killed at 140 degrees.

Make at least 75 per cent of your fruits and vegetables uncooked. Add flavors or dressings, if you like, and you will see what results you will get.

This is not abstract theory. I have observed the progress of hundreds of such goiter cases.

Minerals mean a normal thyroid gland. Mineral starvation means goiter.

Now, in the name of common sense, don't apply the salt cellar or hydrogen peroxide after reading this article if, perchance, you are suffering from goiter.

Whenever I speak of minerals in this column, I don't mean the type that you sprinkle forth or that you get in pill form. I have reference only to one group—the vast class encountered in natural, organic form—the fruits, vegetables and whole grains.

"Athlete's Foot"

Riverside, Calif.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

There are no doubt a number of people who should be interested in reading something written by you on "athlete's foot," the disease supposed to be acquired by walking barefoot on the floors of public bathing places, gymnasiums, and so forth, and caused by a parasite of some kind which it is often necessary to remove by surgical means.

Could you refer me to something you have already said on the subject or perhaps you have something on this ailment which you can send to me.

Thank you for a reply. A READER.

The above communication is timely, for I intended to write on the subject anyhow.

In my health recommendations, I often include barefootedness.

One of the most dramatic tales told of the effectiveness of this measure lies in the story of the late Emperor Franz Josef. In his early thirties he was laid up with acute Bright's disease and given up to die by the best physicians of Europe. Already having a blood stream reputed to be weak, due to the inbreeding of the royal families of Europe, his hopes were not very roseate.

He happened to learn, by chance, of the almost miraculous cures accomplished by an old Catholic priest called Father Kneipp. He learned that this venerable father was able to perform miracles of healing with no other agents than water, sunshine and prayer.

He called Father Kneipp to his aid. The latter put him on the "grape cure," which, in reality, consists of nothing more than the consumption of liberal quantities of grapes and grape juice, with no other food.

Then he had the Emperor walk barefoot in the grass for days and weeks at a time.

STEALER OF MARBLE

By Edgar Wallace

The Quaint Mr. Reeder, Detective Extraordinary, Tells a Lie and Saves a Life

MARGARET BELMAN'S chiefest claim to Mr. Reeder's notice was that she lived in the Brockley Road, some few doors from his own establishment. He did not know her name, being wholly incurious about law-abiding folk, but he was aware that she was pretty, that her complexion was that pink and white which is seldom seen away from a magazine cover. She dressed well, and if there was one thing that he noted about her more than any other, it was that she walked and carried herself with a certain grace that was especially pleasing to a man of aesthetic predilections.

He had, on occasions, walked behind her and before her, and had ridden on the same street car with her. She invariably descended at a certain corner and was as invariably met by a good-looking young man and walked away with him.

It did not occur to him that he was an object of interest and curiosity to Miss Belman.

"That was Mr. Reeder—he has something to do with the police, I think," she said.

"Mr. J. G. Reeder?"

Roy Master looked back with interest at the middle-aged man scampering fearfully across the road, his unusual hat on the back of his head, his umbrella over his shoulder like a cavalryman's sword.

"Good Lord! I never dreamed he was like that."

"Who is he?" she asked, distracted from her own problem.

"Reeder? He's a detective."

Suddenly she stopped, and he looked at her in surprise.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"I don't want you to go any farther, Roy," she said. "Mr. Telfer saw me with you yesterday, and he's quite unpleasant about it."

"Telfer?" said the young man indignantly. "That little worm! What did he say?"

"Nothing very much," she replied, but from her tone he gathered that the "nothing very much" had been a little disturbing.

"I am leaving Telfer's," she said unexpectedly. "It is a good job, and I shall never get another like it—I mean, so far as the pay is concerned."

Roy Master did not attempt to conceal his satisfaction.

"I'm jolly glad," he said vigorously. "I can't imagine how you've endured that boudoir atmosphere so long. Anyway, Telfers are shaky. There are all sorts of queer rumors about them in the city."

"But I thought it was a very rich corporation!" she said in astonishment.

He shook his head.

"It was—but they have been doing lunatic things—what can you expect when a half-witted weakling like Sidney Telfer is at the head of affairs? They underwrote three concerns last year that no brokerage business would have touched with a barge-pole, and they had to take up the shares. One was a lost treasure company to raise a pirate ship that sank three hundred years ago! But what really did happen yesterday morning?"

"I will tell you tonight," she said, and made her hasty adieux.

Mr. Sidney Telfer had arrived when she went into a room which, in its luxurious appointments, its soft carpet and dainty et ceteras, was not wholly undeserving of Roy Master's description.

The room, with its stained-glass windows and luxurious furnishings fitted Mr. Telfer perfectly, for he was exquisitely arrayed. He was tall and so painfully thin that the abnormal smallness of his head was not at first apparent. As the girl came into the room he was sniffing delicately at a fine cambric handkerchief, and she thought that he was paler than she had ever seen him—and more repellent.

He followed her movements with a dull stare, and she had placed his letters on his table before he spoke.

"I say, Miss Belman, you won't mention a word about what I said to you last night?"

"Mr. Telfer," she answered quietly, "I am hardly likely to discuss such a matter."

"I'd marry you and all that, only clause in my mother's will," he said disjointedly. "That could be got over—in time."

She stood by the table, her hands resting on the edge.

"I would not marry you, Mr. Telfer, even if there were no clause in your mother's will; the suggestion that I should run away with you to Europe—"

"South America," he corrected her gravely.

She could have smiled, for she was not as angry with this rather vacant young man as his startling proposition entitled her to be.

"The point is," he went on anxiously, "you'll keep it to yourself? I've been worried dreadfully all night. I told you to send me a note saying what you thought of my idea—well, don't!"

This time she did smile, but before she could answer him he went on, speaking rapidly in a high treble that sometimes rose to a falsetto squeak:

"You're a perfectly beautiful girl, and I'm crazy about you, but . . . there's a tragedy in my life . . . really. Perfectly ghastly tragedy. An' everything's at sixes an' sevens. If I'd had any sense I'd have brought in a feller to look after things. I'm beginning to see that now."

For the second time in twenty-four hours this young man, who had almost been tongue-tied and had never deigned to notice her, had poured forth a torrent of confidences, and in one had, with frantic insistence, set forth a plan which had amazed and shocked her. Abruptly he finished wiped his weak eyes, and said in his normal voice:

"Get Billingham on the 'phone; I want him."

She wondered, as her busy fingers flew over the keys of her typewriter, to what extent his agitation and wild eloquence was due to the rumored "shakiness" of Telfers Consolidated.

Mr. Billingham came, a sober little man, bald and taciturn, and went in his secretive way into his employer's room. There was no hint in his appearance or his manner that he contemplated a great crime. He was stout to a point of podginess; apart from his habitual frown, his round face, unlined by the years, was marked by an expression of benevolence.

Yet Mr. Stephen Billingham, managing director of the Telfer Consolidated Trust, went into the office of the Central Bank late that afternoon and presented a bearer check for five hundred thousand dollars, which was duly honored.

"Put down that jug or I'll blow your features into comparative chaos," said Reeder, as he thrust his gun through the jagged gap.

Of Billingham's movements thenceforth little was known. Neither the airways nor the waterways had known him, the police theory being that he had left by an evening train that had carried an excursion party to Florida.

"This is the biggest steal we have had in years," said the District Attorney. "If you can slip in sideways on the inquiry, Mr. Reeder, I should be glad. Don't step on the toes of the police—they are quite amiable people where murder is concerned, but a little touchy where money is in question. Go along and see Sidney Telfer."

Fortunately, the prostrated Sidney was discoverable outside the city area. Mr. Reeder went into the outer office and saw a familiar face.

"Pardon me, I think I know you, young lady," he said, and she smiled as she opened the little wooden gate to admit him.

"You are Mr. Reeder—we live in the same street," she said, and then quickly: "Have you come about Mr. Billingham?"

"Yes." His voice was hushed as though he were speaking of a dead friend. "I wanted to see Mr. Telfer, but perhaps you could give me a little information."

The only news she had was that Sidney Telfer had been in the office since seven o'clock and was at the moment in such a state of collapse that she had sent for the doctor.

"I doubt if he is in a condition to see you," she said.

"I will take all responsibility," said Mr. Reeder soothingly. "Is Mr. Telfer—er—a friend of yours, Miss ——?"

"Belman is my name." He had seen the quick flush that came to her cheek; it could mean one of two things. "No, I am an employee, that is all."

Her tone told him all he wanted to know. Mr. J. G. Reeder was something of an authority on office friendships.

"Bothered you a little, has he?" he murmured, and she shot a suspicious look at him. What did he know, and what bearing had Mr. Telfer's mad proposal on the present disaster? She was entirely in the dark as to the true state of affairs; it was, she felt, a moment for frankness.

"Wanted you to run away! Dear me!" Mr. Reeder was shocked. "He is married?"

"Oh, no—he's not married," said the girl shortly. "Poor man, I'm sorry for him now. I'm afraid that the loss is a very heavy one—who would suspect Mr. Billingham?"

"Ah! who indeed!" sighed the lugubrious Reeder, and took off his glasses to wipe them; almost she suspected tears. "I think I will go in now—that is the door?"

Sidney jerked up his face and glared at the intruder. He had been sitting with his head on his arms for the greater part of an hour.

"I say . . . what do you want?" he asked feebly. "I say . . . I can't see anybody . . . District Attorney's Department?" He almost screamed the words. "What's the use of prosecuting him if you don't get the money back?"

Mr. Reeder let him work down before he began to ply his very judicious questions.

"I don't know much about it," said the despondent young man. "I'm only a sort of figurehead. Billingham brought the checks for me to sign and I signed 'em. I never gave him instructions; he got his orders. I don't know very much about it. He told me, actually told me, that the business was in a bad way—half a million or something was wanted by next week . . . Oh, my God! And then he took the whole of our cash."

Sidney Telfer sobbed his woe into his sleeve like a child. Mr. Reeder waited before he asked a question in his gentlest manner.

"No, I wasn't here: I went down to Brighton for the week-end. And the police dug me out of bed at four in the morning. We're bankrupt. I'll have to sell my car and resign from my club—one has to resign when one is bankrupt."

There was little more to learn from the broken man, and Mr. Reeder returned to his chief with a report that added nothing to the sum of knowledge. In a week the theft of Mr. Billingham passed from scare lines to paragraphs in most of the papers—Billingham had made a perfect getaway.

In the bright lexicon of Mr. J. G. Reeder there was no such word as holiday. To Mr. J. G. Reeder the very idea of wasting time was repugnant, and it was his practice to brighten the dull patches of occupation by finding a seat in a magistrate's court and listening, absorbed, to cases which bored even the court reporter.

Two drunks, a shop theft, and an embezzlement had claimed his rapt attention, when Mrs. Jackson was escorted to the dock and a rubicund policeman stepped to the witness stand, and, swearing by his Deity that he would tell the truth and nothing but the truth, related his peculiar story.

"P. C. Perryman, No. 9717," he introduced himself conventionally. "I was on duty on Edge Avenue early this morning when I saw the prisoner carrying a large suit case. On seeing me she turned round and walked rapidly in the opposite direction. Her movements being suspicious, I followed and, overtaking her, asked her whose property she was carrying. She told me it was her own and that she was going to catch a train. She said that the case contained her clothes. As the case was a valuable one of crocodile leather I asked her to show me the inside. She refused. She also refused to give me her name and I asked her to accompany me to the station."

There followed a detective sergeant.

Asthma

The influx of asthma tourists continues unabated. Each trainload brings its sufferers.

The advantages of a dry, mild climate such as in California and Arizona have been broadcast to asthmatic and hay fever sufferers throughout the world. Hence, there is an unusual interest in this trouble.

Unfortunately, most asthmatics, before resorting to natural methods, have literally gone the gamut.

There is a remunerative field for the patent medicines. Nine out of every ten asthmatic sufferers can tell the merits or demerits of a patent medicine from its name or title. That is the trouble with most of them. Then when the benefits of climate can be procured, they are at a disadvantage. Their bodies are too doped and poisoned.

I have written repeatedly on the natural methods of curing asthma. I have told you the exercises, the dietetic discipline, the necessity for sun baths, the correct posture, the rigid sex hygiene the breathing exercises, and so on.

If you do not have the articles, I have incorporated the gist of them in a free leaflet which you may procure by sending me a self-addressed stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp.

What the asthmatic should understand —something just as important as his cure by natural methods—is the fallacy of drug medication.

The Pure Foods and Drugs Act prohibits the manufacturer from saying that his product will cure disease unless it actually, definitely and positively does so. Hence, you will notice that few of them will say "cure" on the label of the bottle or box in which the remedy comes. They will say that such and such a product treats asthma successfully or that one gets good results or relief, or any other word which will substitute for the word "cure."

There are a million ways to get around the law and you may safely leave it to them to do so. However, the law does not cover the literature which goes with the bottle or box sold. On this it says that the product cures asthma. Then they cannot be prosecuted.

The chicanery of patent medicines is proverbial.

I don't mind the dollars which they filch from you. There are more dollars available. It is rather the loss to health and life, elements which are not as easily recoverable, that I resent.

If the asthmatic would understand the way a drug of this kind acts, he would hesitate not once but a dozen times before taking it.

Some of these medicines paralyze the nerve centers, particularly the phrenic nerve which governs the diaphragm in breathing. Others suppress the action of the mucous membrane, thus preventing the formation of mucus and invariably leading to a chronic inflammation which, in many instances, is but one step away from active tuberculosis.

Remember, the asthmatic is always a borderline tubercular case as well. Only a step divides the two.

The inhalants which are sold as asthma remedies do just as much damage as the hypodermics taken into the blood. They act as mucous membrane astringents. They relieve the attack for the moment but only to pave the way for an attack doubly severe.

I have yet to see a so-called asthma remedy which has ever cured asthma. What it does, in addition to poisoning and doping the patient, is to make a curable asthmatic state incurable.

My leaflet on asthma goes into the question much more thoroughly. It is available to any Times reader for a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp.

The main thing for the asthmatic to understand is, "Leave Drugs Alone!"

A Raw Food Dining-Room

Los Angeles is unique in more things than those proclaimed by our Chamber of Commerce.

Superlatives may be applied in many directions. As a health writer, of course, I see the superlatives mainly along my lines. The fact that this city consumes nearly five times as much fruits and vegetables per capita as any other city in the United States is, indeed, a proud achievement partly traceable to the teaching of "Care of the Body."

It has done more, however. It has, in a sense, reformed the better class of restaurant and cafeteria where one can procure the finest of health viands—cooked and uncooked.

I often delight in going to these different cafes and procure foods thoroughly in accord with my ideas. I have no difficulty.

Every better-class cafeteria carries a full line.

In addition, we have four or five health cafeterias located in the down-town district. One of these is a particularly interesting and charming place from more views than one.

I don't know of another restaurant anywhere in the world that can boast of not having a cook stove. This is one.

One can procure everything from imitation meats to mother's best baked pies —yet none has the addition of heat.

Everytime I go there I am astonished at the variety and assortment of foods

I Know How This Gland Can Be Fed

Professor Paul C. Bragg

Years of laboratory experiments showed me exactly how to feed your MOST VITAL GLAND, how to restore the power and energy of youth, how to build up every worn-out cell so that you can banish for many years all fear of weakness, loss of vitality, painful and embarrassing experiences. Men over 40 and many much younger—women who tire easily and suffer periodic distress—all can be restored to glowing health and vigor by means of GLANTEX, a scientific, approved method of feeding this vital gland. GLANTEX is absolutely harmless and contains no drugs. Write for my special FREE offer of Full 30-day treatment and for my FREE BOOK, "The Return to Youth," mailed in plain envelope.

FEET HURT

Our method of making and adjusting arch supports and foot appliances has been endorsed by many prominent people of this and other states. This NEW SYSTEM of foot correction is years ahead of any other method that we know of, for it relieves foot pains in many instances almost instantly, and gives permanent relief. Our further weight supports overcome fallen arches, swollen ankles, run-over heels, weak feet, flat foot, painful heels, pains in the knee, leg and back; prevents corns, bunions, etc. The following are extracts from a few of the many testimonials that we have received from grateful people:

May I express my appreciation of the success you have made in correcting my wife's foot trouble.
FRIEND W. RICHARDSON, Berkeley, Calif.
(Ex-Governor Richardson of Calif.)

You have done wonders for me. I cannot thank you sufficiently.
DR. A. N. WARD, A.M., D.D., LL.D.
Pres. Western Maryland College.

It is a pleasure for me to thank you for the effective service you have given me. When I came to you my arches were completely broken down, walking was a torture. The whole system was badly affected by the condition of my feet. After the first visit I grew better, and have continued to improve. I realize that my case was of long standing and thus I am so much more confident of your method and arch supports. I consider it a duty to let sufferers know what he can do for them.
FATHER T. J. McDONALD,

Many of the inmates of the St. Joseph Hospital and St. Anne Academy have been relieved of their foot pains by his modern method of foot correction.
RIGHT REV. FATHER LETERME,

I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere appreciation for the instant relief obtained from the pair of arch supports recently secured from you. I wish to commend most highly your system to all foot sufferers.

Copper-Haired Girl Revives Stephen Derx's Interest

Reckless

By Elsa Barker

STEPHEN DERX went to Monte Carlo because it was the most reckless place he could think of.

He had been there a week now, playing a little, walking a little, driving for hours every day along the coast and up and down the neighboring hills in the new French car he had bought. A big gray car.

Like most people who go out looking for recklessness, Stephen was serious minded. When the lovely and ethereal Angela Drew, back there in New York, had told him that though he was dear to her she was afraid to marry him because her father and mother had been so unhappy together, it had not occurred to him, as it would have occurred to a light minded fellow, that Angela had confessed her unfitness to make a man happy. When merely being alive is so risky, why draw the line at marriage?

Stephen was 30, and good looking in a tall, dark, distinguished way. Though he had received a blow, this only son of the late John Derx, who had left him a million in copper stocks, was not wearing his heart on his sleeve.

That night in the big Salle Schmit of the Monte Carlo Casino he might not have looked twice at the girl with the copper red hair and the cinnamon colored eyes who had slithered into the chair next his at the roulette table if she had not asked him a question.

It was that second look which made him catch his breath. Her beauty was startling. Unusual. With that hair and those eyes, and her skin like the petal of a white flower, she wore a low cut dress of ivory crepe and carried a large fan of henna colored ostrich feathers. Artful—very. Stephen had noticed her hand, too, as she leaned forward to make her play—a long, white, ringless hand.

"Vingt-et-un, rouge, impair et passe," droned the voice of the croupier.

It was then that she turned to Stephen and asked her question:

"I got the number, but what was the rest of it?"

"Red, odd, and over eighteen."

She laughed.

"That's me, red, odd, and over eighteen. Twenty-one, too—isn't it funny? Beginner's luck."

She had staked twenty francs, the minimum stake at their table—about eighty cents—en plein, on the number of her years.

"How much have I won?" she asked eagerly. "Tell me in dollars."

He calculated roughly, "Say twenty-eight."

"What?"

Her astonishment seemed to amuse an old woman who sat on her other side, and who spoke to her now in rapid French, her eyes lighting with the sudden excitement of the gambler.

The girl turned to Stephen again, "What does she say?"

He interpreted, "Madame advises that you take all your winnings on the chance of a repetition of the number twenty-one. It's a long chance, you know. You'll probably lose it all back again. Of course, you might win thirty-five times what you've won already, but I . . ."

"Gee whiz! Of course I'll do it."

There was no mistaking her nationality. She was one of ours.

Stephen had paid no attention to the weary invitation of the croupier, "Messieurs, faites vos jeux." He waited.

"Le jeu est fait. Rien ne va plus," the monotonous voice of the croupier announced indifferently, as the wheel moved more slowly and the little ivory ball was again deciding where it was going to rest.

"Vingt-et-un, rouge, impair et passe."

"Twenty-one again!"

The girl clutched Stephen's arm, and her cinnamon colored eyes were shining with a feverish brilliancy.

"Can I do it again? Leave it on?"

He laughed. "No use. There's something they call the maximum on one stake. Of course you could scatter it around; but for goodness' sake, take your money, and—excuse me—but you ought to stop playing right now. You said it yourself, beginner's luck. Don't tempt Fate—unless money is nothing to you."

"I'm no good at figures. How much have I won? In dollars again."

"Oh . . . around a thousand."

She sat back in her chair. She had suddenly grown very pale.

"Why. . . . that's more money than I ever had at one time in my life."

She was being paid, in counters and notes.

"What do I do with these things?" she indicated the counters.

"May I show you?" He rose. "I'm not going to play any more, either."

As he was moving toward the bureau de change with the tall girl, she suddenly turned and went back to the old French woman for her suggestion. He felt curiously stimulated. As she was stuffing the last of the money into her silk bag she said, more to herself than to him:

"It's a good thing I have this—in case something should happen."

He remembered that—afterward.

Now Stephen Derx was not given to hesitation. He wanted to talk to this girl.

"Are you alone?" he asked. "As we're fellow Americans, I should like to see you safely to your hotel."

"We're staying at the Hotel de Paris," she answered, "and for the moment I am alone. Mrs. Resher has gone to bed with a headache."

"I'm at the Paris myself. My name is Derx, Stephen Derx."

"And my name is Gwendolen Pearson."

They made their way through the crowd and crossed the atrium to the vestibule, where she got her wrap from the vestiaire.

When they were going down the Casino steps he said:

"Suppose we have something to eat over there in the Café de Paris?"

"Thank you, I will. I'm hungry."

She had shown no surprise at his invitation.

Up from the sands below came the soft swish-swish of the sea.

"How utterly lovely it is here?" she gasped. "Only think of the snow and the slush in New York, then look at these gardens. Feel the gentleness of this air on our faces. Oh, it was worth while! I'm so glad I did it."

She seemed undisturbed by the fact that he had "picked her up."

They went into the crowded restaurant, and even before they sat down at a table Stephen was aware that his companion was the handsomest woman in the room.

"You haven't been here long, then?" he asked her.

"Two days. We came straight from New York on one of those Mediterranean boats. I never crossed the ocean before."

"You spoke of Mrs. Resher. I'm a New Yorker. Ought I to know who she is?"

"Well, if you know who she is you know more than I do."

"Do you want to tell me about [illegible]" he smiled.

She looked at him, seemed to be weighing him. "Yes-yes, I believe I do . . . that is . . . most of it." A rush of color swept over her face. He wondered why.

"It began in New York," she said, "in the drug store under the Hotel Belmont, a week before we sailed. I was having an ice cream soda with a girl I know, when I said to her that I'd give my head and all my hopes of paradise to go to Monte Carlo. My friend had another engagement, she left me standing there by the soda counter. Then I heard a woman's voice beside me. 'Your head and all your hopes of paradise! Well, I'll take you to Monte Carlo, young lady—perhaps.' I looked round. An oldish woman in black velvet and pearls, with gray hair and very sharp black eyes, stood there looking at me. She wasn't even smiling. 'Is there some catch in it,' I asked her, 'that you say perhaps?' She laughed then. 'Why not come upstairs to my room?' she said. 'We'll talk it over.' Well . . . I went. It was all so sudden and—and sort of unreal, you know, as if it were happening in a dream."

At that moment the waiter appeared with their supper, the sommelier with their wine.

The girl went on with her story. She had gone to the old lady's room, had been asked who and what she was. Had she any family? Did she work? Had she a sweetheart?

"I told her my parents were dead, that I was an advertising copywriter at Briggs', the big dry goods shop, that I didn't know any man I couldn't live without. She said then that she'd take me to Monte Carlo, as her companion, and give me a certain sum for spending money. I was so excited, so thrilled, I threw up my job the next day and applied for my passport."

"And you didn't even ask her who she was?"

"No. Hadn't she heard me say—"

"But who are her friends?"

"So far, I haven't seen any. She's nice to me, gave me this dress and this evening wrap. I had already a fur coat for the ship and a lot of other things. I earned only $50 a week, but I always spent a good deal of it for clothes. We have to, in a place like Briggs'."

Any one listening would have thought that she had known Stephen a lifetime.

"You said a little while ago, Miss Pearson, that you could tell me 'most of it.' Is there something else?"

Again that wave of color swept over her face. She looked at the tablecloth, crumbled a bit of bread between her fingers. Suddenly she looked up at him.

"Forget it."

"Just as you say. I suppose you don't know a soul in Europe."

"Not a soul."

"Well . . . hang onto your winnings tonight. Don't play roulette again."

"Yes," she laughed, "my luck does—leave the door open."

That adventurous spirit. What would it do with her here? He caught himself back from wondering what it might have done with her already, back there in that wild world she came from.

Suddenly she asked him if he did any kind of work.

"I have passed the bar," he smiled, "I'll go home and work next year."

He said goodnight to Miss Pearson at the door of their hotel, then strolled out again across the Place. She had declined his invitation to drive with him the next day in his car. Her time was not quite her own.

The next afternoon he went for a walk with an old acquaintance of his, an official of the Monagasque police. They were going through the Condamine when he saw Gwendolen Pearson driving by in a taxicab with an oldish woman in black.

"Do you know that lady, Mrs. Resher?" he asked the official.

"N-not personally. She has a new girl with her this time."

It was the man's tone, not the words.

"What about Mrs. Resher?" Stephen pursued his inquiry.

"Oh—nothing. An American. All sorts of people come here, as you know."

There was finality in the nonchalance of that answer, and the lean, alert Monagasque began speaking of other things.

Half an hour later the gray car was

"How much have I won?" she asked eagerly. "Tell me in dollars."

GOOD SHORT STORIES

Compiled for The Times Sunday Magazine

Toney

Mrs. O. L. DeFur of Inglewood has discovered what's wrong with the country.

"I was sitting in a bus, waiting for 'His Highness' the driver to get through flirting with the girl in the corner drug store, when two men entered. They were evidently in the middle of a discussion of existing labor conditions, for one spoke up, saying:

"'Yes, I admit times are hard and I can tell you the reason. Too much education. Men won't work any more. I mean work with pick and shovel. They want collar and tie jobs, something high fallutin'.

"'They all want to run a street car, drive a milk route or a bus! Yes, sir, it's too much education.'"

Thorough

For thorough house cleaning apply to Frances X. Kadow of Hollywood. He claims to know a housemaid who's there.

"The house smells very cleanly," the mistress commended this pearl of purity.

"Yes, Missis," the latter replied proudly. "I believe in fumination. I use lots of sal soda, constrained lye and curate of lime in my work."

Satisfied

Sandy McPherson was in town for a holiday, according to Sherman J. McQueen of Monrovia, and, observing a procession passing along the street, joined it. In due course of time he found himself seated at a table enjoying the good things that were going around.

The whisky was good and Sandy had more than his share, with the result that he began to be merry. He stood up at length to propose the toast of 'The bride and bridegroom' when he was suddenly pulled to his seat with the remark:

"'It's no' a marriage, man, it's a funeral.'

"'Marriage or no marriage,' insisted Sandy, 'it's been a grand success.'"

Surprised

George Martin of Burbank has a young friend Jack, whose great ambition was to be an uncle. Thanks to an older brother, this ambition was finally realized and Jack hurried to the hospital to get his first glimpse of the long-desired nephew or niece. Jack didn't much care which, so long as it made him an uncle.

The nurse brought out the little one for Jack's inspection and it stared up into his face with a pair of big blue eyes.

"My goodness!" exclaimed Jack, "I thought they didn't open their eyes till they were nine days old!"

True

When the manager of Primo Carnera first came to Los Angeles to arrange a fight for the big boy, he told Promoter Jack Doyle all about him. Doyle was greatly interested in the Italian battler's dimensions and expressed proper astonishment.

"You bet he's big!" continued the manager. "Why, he has to have a bed over seven feet long!"

"That's a lot of bunk!" snorted Doyle and was quite surprised when everybody laughed.

Slipped

Judge Crawford, speaking about vocations, remarked:

"It is sad, but true, that many a student prepares to enter some favored walk of life, only to be thrust by circumstances into something else. The trained lawyer becomes a merchant; the divinity student a stock broker, with the long years of special training utterly thrown away. Yes, they are like Mary. A friend of the family asked about her one day:

"'Is Mary married? The one who was so proficient in all branches of domestic science?'

"'No, and not likely to be,' sighed the old-fashioned mother. 'You see, she was so busy fitting herself to be the perfect wife that she utterly neglected getting a man to prove it to.'"

Records

Speaking about records, one of the Hunter brothers, who made the flying endurance mark, declared that knowledge was the prime requisite for success.

"Whatever it is, you have to know your stuff; have had plenty of experience and above all, know what to do in case something goes wrong. I am afraid that there are too many record chasers like Billy Jones.

"A friend stopped Billy's father on the street one day and remarked:

"I thought your boy was going to set up a record with that new motorcycle of his.'

"'He did,' snorted the father, 'eight times in the hospital in two months.'"

Trials

In speaking about the verdict in a rather unusual case, Judge Raymond MacNeille remarked:

"It used to be that lawyers were in the habit of vying with each other in picking jurors who knew nothing about the case in hand. Now they vie even more strongly in picking jurors who know nothing about anything."

Great

Here's a story from Chicago and strange to say there's neither a gun nor a gang in it. It seems a Chicago woman came out here to Los Angeles a few weeks ago when the hot wave in Chicago was at its zenith. She enjoyed her stay here in cool Southern California and when she got home, told her friends about it.

"Just think!" she exclaimed. "When I left Chicago, the thermometers were a hundred and in Los Angeles they were only eighty!"

"My, what a bargain!" exclaimed her dearest friend.

Threatened

It was during a Washington diplomatic gathering that Ruth Bryan Owen was subjected to some joshing regarding her success in politics, especially since some of her views are at wide variance from those of her famous father.

"Yes, and I have some more!" laughed Ruth, "and one of them is that it wouldn't hurt Uncle Sam to get married."

Disagreed

A son of the original Siamese twins has recently been located in a Kansas poorhouse. Asked if it wasn't true that this famous pair of two-in-one often had violent quarrels, he replied:

"That isn't true. But of course they did have their differences. My father loved poker and he would often sit up all night to play. Uncle Chang never played and it took a good deal of persuasion to get him to stay up so long. Father loved checkers, too, and sometimes Uncle Chang got mad when he insisted on playing for hours at a time.

"But the only time they quarreled so violently that they wanted to take the risk of being cut apart was once when Uncle Chang wanted to eat some apples that father was sure would give him a stomach ache."

America's Super-Bandit

gence exceeding the best among them. And after weeks of search the hunt abated for lack of encouraging results.

"There are forty-five of us," Joaquin said, "I will divide you in four parts. One group of ten will follow Gonzales into the region about Mokelumne Hill. Tresdedos, you and your ten will go down into Baja California. Reinaldo, you will lead your men into Sonora. I will take mine down to Calaveras. The women will stay behind.

"When you return you will bring at least one new man for each one that goes forth. Remember, every new man you bring is either a potential comrade-at-arms or he is a traitor.

"Then each band is to steal two hundred and fifty horses, I want one thousand horses in our valley. We meet in six weeks."

With only five women left behind to guard their valley the whole band rode down the narrow pass and there separated.

Joaquin and his men scattered as they approached the county seat of Calaveras. Joaquin was dressed as a prosperous Mexican of the leisure class. He looked the part. For it must be remembered he came of good family, was fundamentally refined and had had the upbringing of a gentleman. So that when he entered town in his new role he had not the slightest difficulty in passing as "Don Michel de Cordoba," a Mexican capitalist looking about for some big American mining enterprise in which to invest money.

As such he was welcomed by the leading men of the town. He talked big business in the cautious, apparently sincere manner of a man used to big transactions.

"But your country is so unsettled," he said to a group of the leading miners. "There, for example, is this new bandit, Joaquin. I am ashamed that he is a fellow-countryman of mine. But I am reluctant to invest my money in a country troubled by such a villain."

"Well, if that's all that's troubling you, you'll soon be reassured," he was told. "Gen. Bean of our militia is organizing a campaign against Joaquin. He has Arkansaw, a man who came near being murdered by Joaquin, as his guide. Arkansaw knows Joaquin by sight. And whatever Gen. Bean sets out to do, he accomplishes. Give him three weeks and he'll come back with Joaquin's head dangling from his saddle horn!"

Joaquin respectfully listened. "I should like to meet this Gen. Bean and be reassured by him personally."

So the wealthy Mexican capitalist was introduced to the tough old veteran of the Mexican War who was preparing to exterminate Joaquin. The two had a brief chat and the Mexican left with a courtly Spanish farewell.

But next morning there was consternation in the cavalry troop Gen. Bean was getting ready. An orderly came tearing along and brought the news that Gen. Bean had been murdered.

The orderly had been awakened in the night by hearing the tinkle of breaking glass. He jumped out of bed and saw the door to Gen. Bean's room wide open, whereas when he had gone to sleep the orderly himself had closed it.

He ran into the general's room. By the half light of the early morning he saw his commander's body on the bed, a cudulis buried in his heart.

And attached by a string to the knife was a bit of paper with these few printed words:

"With the compliments of the bandit, Joaquin Murietta."

Better

After finishing his last picture, John Barrymore took a vacation at a well-known Southern California resort noted for its scenic beauty. At luncheon he was particularly impressed by it and forgetting where he was, exclaimed enthusiastically: "Oh, had I the wings of a dove!"

"Beg, pardon, sir," said the waiter, who was standing right behind him, "but I think you'll like your chicken wing better; there's more meat on it."

Facts

"Once in a while it's a good thing to have a job like mine," said Ed Hopkins at a campaign dinner. "I was sitting in the lobby of a down-town hotel waiting for a friend when a prosperous-looking man engaged me in conversation and tried to interest me in a wonderful proposition in which he claimed to have made a fortune.

"Somehow the man's name seemed familiar to me and while he talked, I managed to place him. At that moment, seeing my friend approaching and wishing to get rid of the promoter, I turned to him and remarked:

"'Your clothes and your jewelry seem to bear out your claim to business prosperity, but I happen to be the one man you can't fool—I'm the County Assessor.'"

Disappointing

Gen. Smedley Butler in commenting on the increase of Communist agitation in this country remarked:

"Those things which the Communists profess to desire are very laudable. It is the methods they employ that are dangerous and for the most part they accomplish anything but the object in view. Misplaced zeal.

"Yes, it is misplaced zeal, like the lad who knew how to swim.

"'Do you really think you know how to swim well enough to be a good swimming instructor?' a friend asked Reggy.

"'I must be,' replied Reggy dolefully. 'When I start teaching a girl how to swim she invariably tells me, after a few moments that she has learned perfectly and can get along without me.'"

Clear

Frank Case, New York hotel owner, was motoring in Hollywood a while back, and stopped to ask his way.

"Just go up that road until you come to a house that looks as if Eddie Foy lived in it and then take the first turn to the left," said the citizen who directed him.

"Did Eddie Foy ever live there?" asked Mr. Case.

"No," replied the Hollywooder, "it just looks as if he did."

Mr. Case said he followed the directions and found his way without difficulty.

Mode

Mrs. Viola Lawrence managed to drag her husband away from his arduous duties long enough to take him on a shopping tour. All went well until Vi picked out one of the nifties in the sporting department.

"Hey, wait a minute!" yelled Frank, "I decline to spend fifty dollars for a bathing suit!"

"But Frankie," said Vi soothingly, "this isn't a bathing suit, it's a beach costume."

An Interview With Dr. Vance Joseph Hoyt

"WHEN a man says animals don't think and that they have no sense of humor he does not know what he is talking about." Dr. Vance Joseph Hoyt, author of last year's [illegible] Carlo and Nice. As I said before, Stephen was serious minded. He wanted to send a cable, and he did not want to send it from Monte Carlo or anywhere near it. He had an idea that the antennae of his Monagasque friend were long—long and very sensitive to impressions.

That night he had a dinner engagement at a villa in Beaulieu, but he made an early escape. Before eleven o'clock he was in the Casino; but though he strolled through all the public rooms and the rooms of the Cercle Prive there was no sign of Gwendolen Pearson.

About ten o'clock the next morning he was standing on the steps of the Casino idly watching the pigeons, when he saw Gwendolen strolling by with a man. A small but distinguished looking blond man of perhaps thirty-five. She did not see Stephen, and he turned and watched her out of sight.

He went into the rooms and played roulette rather stupidly, a losing game.

He had never been in such a bad humor after losing at roulette. He strode over to the Hotel de Paris and sent up his name to Miss Gwendolen Pearson. If she was in, could she see him downstairs in the big hall?

She was in. She would be down in a moment.

As he caught sight of her moving swiftly toward him, the long rhythmic lines of her body, her bright head thrown up, he thought of Diana the huntress.

Her gladness at seeing him shone in her eyes. She was radiant.

"Will you come for a drive in my car now?" he asked.

"Oh, I wish I could!" she breathed. "But I'm going to drive to Antibes with Mrs. Resher and a man friend of hers who has just arrived. I don't think we'll be back before night. May I come out in your car tomorrow, instead? I've told Mrs. Resher about you, and she said I might ask you to call—we have a sitting-room; but we're starting for Antibes now in ten minutes. I am so sorry!"

Stephen had been trained in a good school. He accepted his disappointment gracefully. If she would be ready at eleven o'clock tomorrow, he would pay his respects to Mrs. Resher, then they would drive down to San Remo. She [illegible] be crossing the Italian frontier.

She was so thrilled at the thought of setting her foot on Italian soil that she sprang up on her toes like a child.

"But I must run now," she said; "they'll be waiting for me."

Stephen was drinking his coffee in bed the next morning when a cablegram was brought to him, the reply from a young lawyer he knew in New York to that message he had sent from Nice two nights before.

"About Mrs. impossible yet learn anything definite Miss highly regarded in Briggs shop respected in boarding place."

So that was that! She was all right and he could now prove it, "in case something should happen," as she had unconsciously voiced, her uncertainty after winning that thousand dollars at roulette.

Poor kid, to whom a thousand dollars seemed like a fortune! He thought of the timorous Angela Drew, with her income of fifty thousand a year, and sighed.

What could it be like, working all day in a shop for fifty dollars a week!

When promptly at eleven o'clock he presented himself at the door of Mrs. Resher's sitting-room in the hotel and Gwendolen introduced him to a tall gray haired woman in black silk, he told himself that he had been tilting at windmills. At the first glance he thought her a little like his maiden aunt in Montreux—broad angular shoulders, flat chest, sharp profile.

The illusion of her resemblage to Aunt Agatha vanished, however, when Mrs. Resher spoke. Her voice was unpleasant, tinny without resonance. Though her manner was gracious—almost too gracious—Stephen had the curious impression that while she was talking the woman's mind was preoccupied with some anxiety.

He didn't like her.

Now most men and women in Stephen's position—those who have a good deal of money—have one special sense rather keenly developed. Something invisible nudges them when they meet a person who "wants something." It may be financial, it may be social—wants something.

He was being invisibly nudged.

As soon as politeness permitted he [illegible] brown sport dress and hat which she had been wearing yesterday when he saw her walking with the little blond man; but she had thrown over her arm a fur coat in preparation for the "Riviera chill" which always comes just before sunset.

The gray car was waiting for them in front of the hotel.

As soon as a gap in the traffic permitted Stephen to relax his attention for a second or two he said to the girl beside him:

"May I ask you an impertinent question, Miss Pearson?"

"Two or three, if you like."

"Then who was the man you were walking with yesterday morning?"

"Oh, you saw me? That was Rutherford Asham of New York. Mrs. Resher met him and his wife at Biarritz last summer. It was he who drove us out to Antibes yesterday."

As Stephen flushed and gave his undivided attention to the business of steering the car, she said quickly, "Why . . . is there anything wrong with him?"

He did not answer immediately. Then he said:

"Perhaps Mrs. Resher doesn't know, but it's whispered around New York that the Rutherford Ashams are threatening to sue each other for divorce, if you know what that means in the way of unpleasant publicity."

He was not sure that she grasped the full meaning of what he said. The scene they were driving through has long been called the most beautiful in the world, and she was looking around her with shining eyes and exclamations of wonder.

She said breathlessly, "I can understand a person doing something very wicked, if it were the price of being here."

"Yes, so can I," he smiled, "but what kind of wickedness, Miss Pearson?"

"Well, I don't know . . ." She seemed to be thinking about it.

When he could relax his attention again for a moment, Stephen asked, "Aren't you pretty young to have the kind of job you had in New York?"

"Yes, I only got it by favor. The woman at the head of the advertising department of Briggs' was an old school friend [illegible] two years ago I went to see him. I told her I was right up against it, and she got me in there easily enough. But I couldn't have held that job for two years, and got three advances in salary, if I hadn't made good."

He liked the ring of pride in her voice.

She told him that her mother had died when she was sixteen. That her father, a doctor in Plainfield, N. J., had lost all his small savings in a stock speculation which went wrong. So she had to earn her own living.

"The worst thing about my job," she said, "was the store parties."

"What's that?" he smiled. "You know I'm fearfully ignorant."

"Why, store parties—cocktail parties, really. Buyers and us. They bore me to death."

"I wonder what's going to happen to you," he said gravely.

"Oh . . . I don't know. One day at a time. When I said that about being wicked, I didn't mean . . ."

"I'm sure you didn't," he answered, not having been sure of anything of the sort.

Cap Martin, Menton, the Italian frontier, Ventimiglia, Bordighera—as they passed through all these places which she had read about in Riviera romances, Gwendolen's joy was so keen that it was contagious. Stephen felt younger that morning than he had felt for years.

But on the terrace of the restaurant in San Remo where they stopped for luncheon, the wings of her spirit seemed drooping a little.

"Don't you like your first glimpse of Italy?" he rallied her gayly, across the flower-decked table.

She sighed. "Yes. Too much. I was thinking—if all this should be suddenly taken away from me. If Mrs. Resher should die, or—or something."

To distract her mind from such gloomy fancies, he began to tell her about the old race of primitive people, a few of whose descendants yet dwell in the hills behind San Remo.

Suddenly she leaned across the table, her brown eyes alight with an almost feverish enthusiasm.

"I want to learn everything—everything. Why, the history of thousands of

THAT'S MY FATHER

By BRUCE BARTON

A YOUNG professional man took me to a country town to call on his parents. The old couple have raised eight children, of whom six are living and doing well. The father runs a small store.

"I wanted you to meet my people," my friend said later. "They are poor, but I'm very proud of them. When anyone talks pessimistically about marriage or human life in general, I like to remember the record of those two old folks."

On my way from a hummer hotel to a near-by golf course I picked up a caddy, a bright-eyed youngster of thirteen.

"Are you staying at the Inn?" he asked.

I nodded.

"Have you met the night engineer?"

I said that unfortunately my contacts had been entirely with the day staff.

"You should meet him," the youngster said proudly. "That's my father."

It is assumed by those who view the social structure with disfavor that men work from only two motives—money or reputation.

I venture to say that after one has laid by a few extra dollars and has seen his name in print a dozen times these two motives very rapidly lose their power.

Far stronger and more enduring motives, I take it, are the calm appraising eyes of one's children. They are our judges; their opinion counts more than that of all the rest of the world.

Samuel Butler thought it was a great mistake that the generations overlap. He pointed with approval to the example of the moths and beetles which spin their cocoons, surround the new life with enough food to start it successfully in the world, and then quietly die and get out of the way.

It would be much better, he said, if each one of us could come into the world wrapped in twenty thousand dollars, which would see us through to maturity, unincumbered by any acquaintanceship with parents or relations.

Such a world would make just about as much progress as the beetles have made in the past ten thousand years.

We keep going, not so much for money or fame, but in the hope that our kids can say with pride, "That's my father."

The Blue Envelope

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER
Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"NOW take it easy," cautioned Warren, changing his wilted collar. "Don't trot out again in this heat."

"Why, I wanted to go to the Straw Market," Helen packing her Florentine purchases. "For more of those hats."

"Should've got 'em this morning. You'll be all fagged out—and that dinner's at seven."

"Oh, dear, don't forget to give me the address! Write it down—plain."

"Half hour by taxi," scribbling on a blue envelope. "Here you are!"

"Just leave it on the desk," wedging a tissued package into the trunk tray.

"Look—right here!" the envelope propped against the inkstand. "Want me to mail postcards? I'll send one to Stevens."

"And Aunt Emily!" as he scrawled a card. "She loves them from you."

"Not now, have to get along," capping his pen. "Remember, seven sharp!"

Her wistful gaze following him out. If only he could come back for her! Dreading a solo entrance at the Sanborns. Business friends she had never met.

But easier for him to go directly there. His every moment taken. Only three days in Florence this year.

Leaving for Milan on the early morning train. Better finish packing now.

Fitting in the two Straw Market hats. Flat shapes to be blocked at home.

Why hadn't she got more? Absurdly cheap—and hand woven! Ideal presents.

Glancing at the high windows. Golden streaks through the slatted shutters.

The Italian mid-afternoon sun. Scorching! Reckless to venture out now.

Yet the Straw Market so near. If she walked slowly—on the shady side—

Pushing back a heavy shutter, she stepped out on the balcony.

Gingerly touching the stone balustrade. Baking hot!

The piazza below deserted. Even the awninged cafe tables stripped of their yellow cloths.

All Florence in a lethargic heat coma. Suspended animation till five.

Back in the shadowed room. Almost black now, after the glaring sun.

Ten past three. Time for a leisurely bath and nap. Be fresh for the evening.

But the lure of the Hat Market! Her last chance.

All the other things she had failed to get—and regretted! Those long gloves in Vienna. That cane umbrella in Munich—

Now at the mirror, pulling a wide-brimmed hat over her heat-clinging hair.

Soon out in the torrid piazza. The heat like a furnace blast.

On through the Via Calimara. Keeping to the shady side.

Many shops still closed for the siesta hour. Window displays covered from the bleaching sun.

At last the Straw Market. Usually a clamorous bustle under the great classic portico. Now scarcely a customer.

Many stands shut up. Stall-keepers dozing. Some stretched on the stone floor.

Straw the chief commodity here. But also Florentine embroideries. Cutwork linen—piles of doilies, scarfs, tablecloths.

Hats her only interest now. The colorful pyramids of stacked shapes.

A high-heaped stall. The rotund woman drowsing, a half-eaten bun in her lap.

Careful not to wake her. Easier to make selections unimportuned.

Deciding on a black Leghorn, white-lined. A tailored blue Milan for Carrie. A natural plaited Tuscan straw. And a brown-and-tan reversible horsehair.

At her signaling cough the woman waking with a start. Voluble apologies.

"No, no, no more!" pantomimed Helen. "Just these four. Quanto costa?"

Only forty-five lira. Less than sixty cents apiece!

Gleefully carrying off the bulging paper bag.

Back through the sun-grilled streets, clinging to the awninged strips of shade.

Again the somnolent Piazza Vittorio Emanuele. Past the still deserted cafes.

Into the hotel. Leaving an order at the desk—to be called at six.

The welcome duskiness of their room. The restful summer bareness of Italian hotels. No dust-catching draperies. The brick floors rugless.

At last a cooling bath. Not quite five when she emerged. An hour to rest.

Wondering about the dinner as she slipped between the linen sheets.

The Sanborns—what would they be like? Somehow an illogical prejudice. Rich Americans in Florence. Formal, pretentious? A constrained evening—

No, she mustn't take that hostile attitude! Believe they were simple, friendly people—and that she would be at ease.

Trying to hold that thought as she drowsed off.

. . . . . .

The burring din of the telephone. Six o'clock!

Helen starting up. Silencing the clamor with a sleepy "Thank you—grazie!"

Opening the shutters to a faint breeze. Whatever the midday heat, always relief at sundown. Mountain coolness from the Apennines.

Rested now. Relaxed. Thinking of the dinner with less dread.

Slipping into her printed chiffon. A happy glow as she pirouetted before the long mirror. The flounced skirt and filmy fichu quaintly becoming.

All ready, with ten minutes to spare! Should she start now?

The address! That blue envelope Warren had left on the desk—

But gaping emptiness by the bronze inkstand. Not there!

Looking under the green blotter. Jerking out the heat-stuck drawer.

A flustered, overturning search. Futile!

The wastebasket! The cap of a water bottle, a torn-up postcard, a wad of cleansing tissues, an empty match box—

No blue envelope!

Another frantic rummaging of the desk drawer. Only that hotel stationery—

Panicky now. No address! And no idea where the place was.

Tugging at the bell-cord. Again. The exasperating Italian languor.

At last the chambermaid. Dark-eyed wonderment at Helen's agitation.

"Oh, I've lost an address! Were you in here this afternoon? A blue envelope—in front of this inkstand. Did you straighten up?"

"Ah, too much fast, signora! No understand."

"An envelope!" painstaking enunciation, with clarifying gestures. "Here—on this desk. A blue envelope! Did you see? Did you take?"

"No, no, signora! I bring the towels. But no touch nothing," an indignant retreat.

Now what? Would they be in the directory? The villa just rented.

No telephone book in the room. Flying down to the office.

A flurried scanning. Sanacore, Sanantonio, Sancherico—No Sanborns!

Explaining to the sympathetic head porter. Mr. Sanborn—Mr. James Sanborn. An American who had rented a furnished villa—

"Whose villa, signora?"

"Oh, I don't know! But can't you ask Information?"

His fluent volubility into the phone. Hanging up with a lugubrious shrug.

"They do not know the Signor Sanborn. You have not the name of the villa?"

"Not even the street! Mr. Curtis wrote it all on that blue envelope."

Then an inspiration. The consul! He must have a list of American residents.

But the porter explained the consulate closed at five. No use calling.

"So often ladies think they lose things, signora," an indulgent smile.

"I'll look again," helplessly. "But I'm sure it's not there!"

Back for another desperate search. Ludicrous places. Even the bathroom!

For the hundredth time, recalling Warren's, Look—right here!" And she had seen that envelope propped against the inkstand!

Already twenty-five of seven! The latest she could start to be on time.

No way of reaching him. What would he do? Wait and wait—in mounting anger. The dinner spoiled, the Sanborns trying to be polite—

He'd just think she was late. Not telephone till he was really worried.

Anguished anticipation of his furious outburst. His scathing "Scatterbrain—dumb Dora!" A wretched evening!

Whirling about at the click of the opening door—

Warren!

"Hello, Kitten!" dropping his briefcase. "Golly, it's been hot. Thought I needed another collar."

With her heart-leaping relief, a swift guilty decision.

He didn't know! Not tell him. Why provoke a discording tirade?

Warren soon emerging from the bathroom in a fresh-scrubbed glow.

"Wow, this was a real scorcher!" buttoning on his collar. "All set?"

"Yes, I—I was just starting," flustered to prevarication.

Trying to suppress her betraying exuberance. Avoiding the head porter's curiosity as they hurried out to the waiting cab.

The great piazza astir now. Reviving traffic. The sidewalk cafes filling up—the festive aperitif hour.

Whizzing off through a street of shops. The windows gaily lighted.

"Oh, I—I'm so glad you came back!" her elation irrepressible. "Much nicer going out together. Why didn't you tell me?"

"Wasn't sure I'd have time. But finished everything up. Now our train goes at —What'd I do with that time-table?"

"Dear, must you carry all those papers? It makes your pockets bulge so. Those old letters—"

Then, with an incredulous cry, snatching at a blue envelope.

"That address! You didn't leave it—"

"Caught with the goods, eh?" unwonted embarrassment in his grin.

"But you—why— was sure I saw it on the desk?"

"Must've picked it up with those cards," a reluctant mumble. "Forgot to mail 'em till a few minutes ago. Found the darn thing—and beat it back."

"And you wouldn't tell me! You let me think I lost it!"

"Huh, needn't lace into me! Weren't you tryin' to put one over? Wouldn't own up you'd lost the address. Well, you thought you had," unfolding the hieroglyphic time-table. "Let's see, we leave Florence at—"

"Oh, dear, how could you?" ignoring his subject-changing tactics. "I was almost frantic trying to locate them. And you—"

"Well, no harm done," with restored nonchalance. "Won't even be late, way this speed-hound's hittin' it up. What's that? Now drop it. Got a nerve bawlin' me out for one little slip—with all the boners you pull!"

WITH the POETS

Along the Highway

The stars in the skies had blinked all night
  At a land, silent and dark;
Then over the hills crept dawn's faint light
  To the call of a meadow lark.
The drowsy poppies on velvety green
  Each shook a golden head.
Catching a glimpse of the first sunbeam,
  Millions jumped out of bed.

They washed their faces in drops of dew
  And dried in sun-warmed air.
Looking out on a world quite new,
  They helped to make it fair.
On a concrete ribbon whizzed along
  A speed-mad motoring pair,
Seeing no flowers, hearing no song;
  But reading the signboards there.

Man had infringed on nature's domain
  And planted along the way
Pictures that all the virtues plain
  Of things to use while you pay.
They boldly beckon to passers- by,
  Being taught by nature wise,
Who flaunts her colors over earth and sky,
  That it pays to advertise.

Flitting Fancies of Fish!

When silver-voiced song birds are singing,
And filling the air with their trills,
As up in the ozone they're winging
O'er mountains and valleys and hills;
When tree-limbs are languidly swaying,
And lazy leaves rustle and swish—
My fancy goes wistfully straying
To streams that are teeming with fish!

I picture them friskily flitting
Through glimmering, rhythmical rills—
And there on the shore I am sitting,
And getting my measure of thrills!
My bait, I seductively dangle,
To lure them to nibble a bite;
In fancy, I loafingly angle
'Til afternoon slips into night!

And thus, at my desk, I sit dreaming,
While duties I slinkingly shirk,
My thoughts on those rivulets, gleaming;
My mind far away from my work!
My pen is a fish pole, that's swishing;
My ink well, a ripple-flecked stream,
And I just imagine I'm fishing—
And gee! what a wonderful dream!

And then through my fabric of fancy
A raspy voice reaches my ear,
And routs all my visions "romancy,"
With words that are hateful to hear!
"Get busy!" the Big Boss is saying,
"Or go find another position!"
And when he has finished his flaying—
My fancy flits back to those fish!

Morton's Toe?

Is walking almost impossible for you on account of excruciating pains which emanate from the fourth toe and shoot through the entire foot? Then you have Morton's Toe, a condition caused by nerve irritation when the metatarsal bones of the foot are crowded or distorted.

Relief from Morton's Toe can only be obtained when the delicate metatarsal bones are restored to their natural position. This, MOVABLE-ARCH SHOES do most effectively. The adjustable metatarsal arch is shaped and fitted to your foot and instantly relieves nerve pressure! . . . MOVABLE-ARCH SHOES are the ultimate triumph of the famous inventor and orthopedist, Dr. A. Reed.

Our Friends of the Chaparral

By Helen R. Crane

An Interview With Dr. Vance Joseph Hoyt, Author of Last Year's Best Seller in Animal Stories and a Recognized Authority on the Animal Life of This Region.

"WHEN a man says animals don't think and that they have no sense of humor he does not know what he is talking about." Dr. Vance Joseph Hoyt, author of last year's best seller in animal stories sat in his tower on the mountain up in Topanga Canyon and discoursed on the animals of Southern California.

"I say they are keener than man any day. Just think of it, 80,000 hunters went into the woods of California last fall to slaughter animals. To be sure, they got more than 21,000 deer, presumably buck, but some escaped them in those thirty days. That proves how clever the deer are. How long do you suppose a man would last if he should take himself to the woods of this State—and California is a large State—with 80,000 other men seeking him with 80,000 rifles? Do you think he would come out alive in thirty days? I hardly think so. But that is what every buck deer in the State is called upon to do every year. Only a few days ago I chanced upon a great buck who was sprouting a set of antlers that would indicate him to be more than five years old.

"Silver Boy," Dr. Hoyt's book, tells the story of a silver gray fox that lived in the canyon. Technically speaking, he was a citizen of Los Angeles because he always lived within the city limits. Harry Carr said in a letter recently to the author that "'Silver Boy' is the most interesting and important book I have read for a long time. It seems remarkable that all this wild life is going on inside the corporate limit of a city of 1,300,000."

Since the appearance of Dr. Hoyt's book he has been recognized as an authority on the animal life of this region and has been called upon to give many lectures. It has seemed impossible for the various clubs and organizations to realize that there are pumas, bobcats, foxes, deer, raccoons, skunks, badgers, coyotes, and the greatest bird that flies—the California condor—all here within thirty miles of Seventh and Broadway!

"I was appalled at the lack of knowledge of the average Californian regarding the chaparral and the animal-life we have here at the doorstep of Los Angeles," the doctor said. "Reviewer after reviewer of 'Silver Boy' laid emphasis on the fact that I had introduced him to the great American chaparral. Mrs. Seton, Mills, William Long, Curwood—they all wrote about every other part of our country but they never wrote about the chaparral.

"It was about time that something was written about the nature-lore, the wild-life of our glorious Southland. We have a peculiar kind of verdant growth that covers mountains, foothills, canyons and valleys. It is known as the chaparral. It comes from a Spanish word, chaparro, meaning scrub-oak. This does not indicate that the shrubs and trees here are all of a dwarf nature, for in this Land of Little Trees, which extends from the Tehachepi Mountains to the Mexican border and from the Pacific Ocean to the Mojave Desert, and covering an area of five million acres, there grow some of the largest trees in the world—the great conifers of the High Sierras.

"In the main, though, this is an elfin forest and consists of a dense, tough and spiny evergreen growth of more than one hundred and fifty different species of chaparral. That is the only kind of verdure sure of survival in a desert-mountain country where it does not rain from May to October.

"Strange as it may seem, too, this elfin forest of ours is a veritable paradise for the naturalist because almost every North American shrub, flower, bird, reptile and mammal thrives in it. Also it is very odd that so little has been written about it."

For several years Dr. Hoyt has been catching the wild animals in box traps, making pets of them and living on equal term with them in his place in Topanga Canyon. He has been studying them as a naturalist and a writer on nature-lore. His notes are scientific and thorough. Even before the date of birth of many of his wild friends his records begin.

For instance, there is the case of Bar-Rac, the raccoon, about whom he has written in a popular magazine. Her chart began with the capture of her parents and there are more than forty pages of typewritten matter, as complete as the chart of a baby in a hospital. There are measurements, weights, time of teething, experiments in raccoon psychology, in fact, there is everything appertaining to the experience of that one little 'coon. When he came to write her biography later he knew what he was doing as clearly as though he were writing of some human baby he had introduced into the world and helped to get adjusted.

Dr. Hoyt says that of all forms of authorship the nature-writer must be the most accurate and that personally he is as conscientious in keeping the records of a baby rattler or fox or he would be with those of a scion of the royal family. He once caught a mountain lion and tamed it to be a household pet, in the meantime keeping careful records of its behavior. He says there are many mountain lions still in this region and that only last year two of them strolled down to the Saddle Stables on Ventura Boulevard and killed a couple of polo ponies.

"The fox is the most difficult animal to tame," he says. "I caught twenty-seven of them in box traps during a period of three years before I could secure two that would breed in captivity. Silver Boy was one of this pair and he became the father of Zorra, our wonder fox. These are California gray foxes. We do not have the red fox this far south. The gray fox is a woods-animal, a tree-climber. Its claws are retractile like a cat's and it does not dig burrows in the ground like the red fox.

"Raccoons here are also different from their brothers farther north. Ours are considerably more gray in color and too, they do not wash their food. This is contrary to the custom of the family and is a typical example of the influence of environment upon the habits of animals. Water is exceedingly scarce in Southern California most of the year and the poor 'coon would starve to death if he refused to eat his food without washing it. Surely when the creek beds are dry for six or seven months a year it must be a problem at times for the wild life to locate drinking-water—let alone washing its food. This is another indication of the great intelligence of the animals. It shows they are equal to the demands of their environment.

"So few people realize these things because they go into woods solely as destroyers. There seems to be an almost universal habit mong people to attempt to destroy all animal and plant life they come upon. The flower-pickers are the worst offenders. And what beauty can one see in a flower that is withered? They see none and so before they get home they throw away their bouquets.

"And to kill animal life has always been a human weakness. Nothing is beautiful when laid low in death. It is the spirit in the animal, the animation of its body in perfect health that should hold the charm, but thousands of men when they see an animal, even in a zoo, exclaim on an impulse, 'Oh, if I only had a gun!' Too, to observe the natural movements of a wild creature in the woods, to photograph its living beauty, is a far cleverer thing to do and is greater sport than hiding behind a tree or a boulder until the chance comes to blow its brains out! There is no sportsmanship, bravery or cleverness in such treachery.

"When we are observing our four-footed brothers of the woods, or the trees and the flowers we are peering at the fundamentals of creation. Fascinating secrets are locked up there for our knowledge and benefit if we train ourselves to know the value of what we observe. To destroy them is decidedly against all the principles of life. Nature has a balance to maintain and woe betide man when he interferes! Every form of life is interdependent upon every other form of life. To deprive one species of its power is to strengthen another and upset the balance.

"For instance, plant and animal life help each other to breathe. Plants retain most of the carbon from the air and return the greater portion of the oxygen when they breathe. Now the animals do just the opposite—they retain the oxygen and give back the carbon. In this way each kingdom is supplied with what it needs for breathing.

"In an acre of soil there are sometimes as many as 25,000 earthworms busily working to stir up the earth while they add acids to it and grind tiny particles of rock. During a year a tiny ant conveys a large amount of soil to the surface of the earth; gophers do too, and all their brother-rodents. This is the life of the woods and fields—it is fascinating, active life and yet you will hear people say, 'What do you see in the country? I am always bored stiff!'

"Man, the grand little trouble-maker, is forever upsetting the balance in Nature. But he pays heavily for his blunders. Epidemics and scourges are caused through his interference many times. The gypsy moth in New England, the peach moth in Japan, the boll weevil, the fruit fly in Florida, are all insect-scourges caused undoubtedly by man's interference with Nature's balance-sheets. Is there anything destroys the bird in so many ways as man does?

"Let the egotist beware! Insects once rules the world and they can surely do it again. The records of Dr. L. O. Howard

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

"NOW take it easy," cautioned Warren, changing his tone. "Don't look out again in this heat."

"Why, I wanted to go to the Silver Market." Helen packed her flowering purchases. "The shops are full of [illegible] curiosity as they hurried out to the waiting cab.

The first gleam came this noon. Reviving traffic. The endearing cares filling up the festive aperitif hour.

Whizzing off through a street of shops. The window gaily flecked

It was seven o'clock when he was speeding his car along the Mayenne Corniche on his way back to Monte Carlo. He stopped in the Candamine and tried to get Gwendolen on the telephone. After a long wait he was told that Miss Pearson could not come downstairs. She had gone to bed with a bad headache; but would he telephone her the next morning at nine o'clock? Yes, he would.

Stephen ate his solitary dinner, prowled around the hotel and read newspapers for a couple of hours, then went to bed. For a long time he lay awake.

He had not told Gwendolen quite all he had learned about her mysterious employer. Mrs. Resher had shown very good judgment in hurrying over the frontier of France into Italy. Gwendolen Pearson had escaped from a dangerous alliance when that old woman who had picked her up in a drug store in New York had dropped her in Monte Carlo.

But was the girl, after all, involved in some way that she dared not tell him?

At ten o'clock the next morning he was sitting with Gwendolen on a bench under an ancient olive tree on the heights above the red roofs and gardens of the town.

She was wearing a long, soft, woolen coat and a little felt hat of that luscious color known as bois de rose. When he complimented her on the becomingness of her getup, she said:

"I bought the things yesterday afternoon in the Boulevard des Moulins."

So that was where she had been, while he hunted her high and low.

"I went shopping," she said, "right after I got the cablegram.

He looked at her quickly. "The cablegram?"

"Do you know a good and inexpensive hotel in Paris? If I start tomorrow I can have two days there before the Majestic sails. Cook has already telegraphed for me to inquire about a cabin, and I must have a glimpse of Paris. I'd never forgive myself if I didn't."

"What are you talking about?"

"The cable from Briggs'. The girl they put in my place is a perfect washout, and they're offering me seventy-five a week if I'll come straight back."

"Oh."

"I cried half the night," she went on, "at the thought of leaving this beautiful place. But everything has been spoiled for me now. Poisoned. And I don't dare throw away an offer like this."

He put out his hand.

"Don't talk any more for a minute."

He was not looking at her, but far off into space. So. She was going away tomorrow. When he looked round at her again he saw her lips quiver.

"Miss Pearson—Gwendolen."

It went through him with a pang how young she was, for all her bright independence, her ability to earn money.

"You don't want to go, do you?" his eyes were searching her face. "Except for the salary, I mean. It isn't some over there?"

"No, no. There isn't any one."

He leaned forward on the bench.

"I don't want you to go away." His voice was not quite steady.

"But you know I must. They'll find somebody else if I don't, somebody really good. Then I'll have to begin all over again in some new place. Don't you realize that it was a job I had with Mrs. Resher—not just a holiday? Don't you know anything at all about real life?"

He was silent. How good and honest and brave she was! Terrifyingly brave. Compared with a glorious and real girl like this, Angela Drew was—nothing.

"I'll send Briggs' a cable at lunch time," she said. "They'll get it this morning in New York, on account of the difference in time."

Busy with his own thoughts, he made no answer.

After a long silence, he turned to her impetuously.

"Look here. You've brightened things up for me. I was in a pretty gray mood that first night, when you slithered into the chair next mine at the roulette table. I can't let you go out of my life like this. If you insist on going back to New York, I'll have to follow you, I suppose."

"Follow me?" Her face had gone perfectly colorless. "You mean that you'd leave all this—to follow me—me?"

He leaned toward her, though he did not touch her.

"I'm in love with you," he said. "I didn't know it until a few hours ago. What are you going to do about it?"

The color surged back into her face. Her mouth was full, and soft, and sweet. She let her eyes meet his for a moment, then his arms were around her.

"Kiss me," he said, "kiss me."

She gave him her sweet lips. But after a few delirious seconds she turned her face away, pushed him back from her, tried to release herself from his clinging arms.

"Oh, why do you do that?" he whispered pleadingly. "Don't you—like me?"

"Yes. Oh, yes—terribly."

She went limp in his arms, and raised her lips to his again with a little sob. Then she pushed him away from her, and stood up.

"No, no," she whispered. "I mustn't, I mustn't . . ."

"But why?" He was standing beside her, his hands on her shoulders. "We're both of us free, thank God! There are all sorts of formalities when Americans marry here, but it can be done. And in the spring we'll motor through Italy. I'm asking you to marry me, Gwendolen. Whatever the other thing was between you and Mrs. Resher is your business, not mine."

She took his head between her hands and kissed him solemnly on the forehead. Then she was half crying, half laughing, her words tumbling over each other:

"But Mrs. Resher had nothing to do with that other thing. It was my reason for coming to Monte Carlo. Don't you remember—don't you remember going into that drug store under the Hotel Belmont with another man, the night before you sailed? Don't you remember the package of cigarettes you bought, and your saying to the other man—a thickset man with a beard—that you were sailing for Monte Carlo next day? You didn't even see me. It was after you went out that I said what I did to the girl who was with me, that I'd give my head and all my hopes . . . Oh, I don't know what you'll think of me! But it was you—you—not Monte Carlo that made me say that . . . you know how girls talk to each other or maybe you don't—and when that old lady spoke to me—said what she did, that she'd take me, I thought it was destiny—what else could I think—and I followed it . . . like an adventuress, a reckless adventuress, just as I've thought since night before last that you believed me to be. But now I'm so happy . . ."

"Don't you understand," his eyes were shining, "it was a power that brought you here, snatched you up from that place in New York and brought you here, using the only means at hand—that old woman? Don't you believe it—darling?"

"But I told you. That's why I came," she said softly.

[Copyright, 1930, by Mabel Herbert Urner.]

"Oh, you are fun and come over here with a woman like that!"

"Oh, just drop—a little adventure."

The word sounded so much like adventuress that he bit his tongue.

"I thought you romantic," he added hurriedly, "romantic and over trustful."

But he knew she had caught the unfortunate word, because her whole body had stiffened.

He leaned forward, anxiously. "You said Miss Pearson, that you could tell me most of it—about your coming over here with that woman. What was the other thing? It may be important. 'Forget ,' you said."

Her face had grown suddenly scarlet. She half rose from her seat, then sank back again.

"If I ever told you that," she murmured. "I—I don't know what you would think of me."

It was not a question which he could pursue any further; but he thought about it for hours after he left her and went upstairs to his own room. It had become for him the question.

Before seeing her this evening he had thought of telegraphing to his Aunt Agatha to come down from Montreux and make him a visit. He was still old fashioned enough to think that a girl needed a chaperon—at least in the background.

But his aunt was not the sort of person to confront with a mystery—feminine, red-haired and good looking.

The next afternoon, when he called on Gwendolen in her new home, she was out.

Out! Was she playing roulette again?

He jumped into his car and drove down to the Place du Casino at such a speed that a traffic policeman yelled at him. But she was nowhere in the Casino. He even looked in the reading-room.

He thought of the Oceanographic museum in Monaco, across the bay. Most Americans go there on their first visit to the principality. But she was not in the museum nor in the aquarium, neither upstairs nor down.

He went back to Monte Carlo and looked through the gaming rooms again.

In the late afternoon he had an unbreakable engagement to take tea with an ancient dame in her villa at Cimiez, an Englishman to whom he had owed many courtesies from his youth up. She was starting for Egypt the next day.

THE WIVES OF THE PRESIDENTS

By J. P. Glass

Ellen Axson, Who Studied German to Help Her Husband at the Same Time That She Cared for Her House and a Baby

She had in their youth a wider vision of art and literature than he.

WHEN the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson lay dying in the White House in August, 1914, she whispered to Dr. Cary Grayson, "Promise me that when I go you will take care of Woodrow."

With life closing, her thought was completely for her husband, as it always had been since the September day in 1883 when she agreed to marry him. Perhaps it was a blessing that she could not know that his greatest trials were ahead of him without her by his side. Only a few days were to pass before war clouds were to darken Europe.

Ellen Louise Axson had responsibility thrust upon her early in life. She was the eldest of four children of the Rev. S. Edward Axson, a prominent Presbyterian minister. Her mother died just as she reached young womanhood and Ellen Axson filled her place until she married Mr. Wilson.

She regarded life seriously. She was always thoughtful of others and her love and wholesome ambition for Woodrow Wilson made her the most important influence in his life. It is doubtful if he would have risen to the Presidency without her.

They met romantically in her home town, Rome, Ga., where Rev. Axson was pastor of the First Presbyterian church. Young Woodrow Wilson had been trying to practice law—with slight success—in Atlanta and had run down to Rome on a matter of business connected with the estate of his cousin, Jessie Woodrow Bones.

Miss Axson saw him first as he passed the home of a friend where she was paying a call. He attracted her, but not so violently as she attracted him when he saw her at church next day. He was so interested that he sought an introduction. He was henceforth deeply in love with her.

Their first meeting was in June and by September they were engaged. But it was the merest chance that this happened.

Young Wilson was in Asheville, N. C., when he accidentally encountered her. She was on her way home from New York, where she was cultivating a genuine talent for painting by studying in the Art Students' League. She had been called by the illness of her father.

He determinedly pressed his suit in the short time allowed him before her departure. He won her consent. But she said later that if she had not agreed to marry him then it probably would not have happened at all. When she got home she found her father desperately ill. It was not long before he died.

How much of Woodrow Wilson's achievements thereafter can be credited to Ellen Wilson will never be known.

At the time of their engagement he had realized his failure at law and he was preparing to fit himself for a professorship by two years of study of history and political economy at Johns Hopkins University. Yet he would have tossed his plans aside in order to have married at once, although he had no money and no income, had she not insisted that he continue.

She had in their youth a wider vision of art and literature than he, and she opened his mind to greater prospects than he had imagined. Indeed, in all the literary labors of his life she was an assistant without whom he scarcely could have proceeded.

He was a man of vast enthusiasms and hence a man who required a full meed of sympathy. She properly tempered his intense likes and dislikes and gave him the needed sympathy. She well understood that she could best help him by understanding him.

When he was preparing his great work on "The State" she was doing her own housework, making her own dresses and looking after her baby. But she found time to study German so as to help him in his examination of difficult German treatises.

She was patient and she understood the practical, worldly world as he could not understand it. Yet it was she who urged him to "seek the highest things he felt in his soul."

So idealistic was she, she insisted on doing away with the inaugural ball, important event in Washington Presidential inceptions, when Mr. Wilson took office.

"I cannot bear to think of a ball, with the modern dances," she said, insisting that the inauguration was too solemn an even for such observance.

Death came to her after only a year and a half in the White House. It fell to the second Mrs. Wilson to see Woodrow Wilson through the trials of the World War and the period following it and preceding his death.

America's Super-Bandit

By Joseph Gollomb

[SYNOPSIS]

Joaquin Murietta, a Mexican boy of nineteen, goes to join his brother, Carlos, who has found gold in California. (This is in the gold rush of 1849.) On his journey he meets and marries the lovely Carmela. But he is forced to leave her in San Francisco when his brother tells him that his claim has been jumped by two Americans, and that they must go find a witness to win it back. Throughout their trip they are followed by two employees of the claim jumpers and at Hangtown a band seizes Carlos and the witness, Flores, and hang them. Despite his horror Joaquin insists on coming back to stake a claim of his own and Carmela goes with him. They are attacked by a band of thirteen, who beat Joaquin unconscious and violate Carmela. Carmela kills herself and Joaquin is bound and beaten. They leave him for dead, but he recovers and within a few months six of the murderous band have been mysteriously stabbed. Joaquin has vowed vengeance.

Joaquin fixed his eyes on him. "Let us decide who shall be leader with horse and wrestling—revolver and musket—saber and cudulla," he said.

CHAPTER II

The Job is Finished

BUT those who had taken part in the lynching of Carlos and Flores, in violating Carmela and in the cowhidin' of Joaquin began to realize that every man thus found stabbed to death had been one of their band.

At first, seven men knew this. Then only six. Later only five. One by one those who suspected the truth had their lips closed by the same agency.

There was never a clew as to where Joaquin was hiding; never a slip of his knife at hand. The remaining four men lost nerve and fled from Hangtown.

Two went to Sacramento. Two others to Calaveras.

It took five months for the two in Calaveras to join their friends in their fate. And after a respite of eight months one of the two survivors joined the others. The last of the thirteen awoke one night in time to feel a steely grip about his windpipe. A voice hissed in his ear.

"I'm finished with your band! But I'm just starting with your countrymen!"

Then he mounted the little ratty pony, which was all the wealth he had, and slowly, painfully journeyed back to the Mexican town where he had met his wife. There he sought out Reinaldo Felix, Carmela's only brother, a man of forty. Reinaldo had fought against the United States in its war with Mexico, had been through fire and hell and was a hardened, taciturn man, smooth-shaven, tight-lipped, with hair of iron gray. The one passion left in his heart was his love for his only sister. When Joaquin arrived Reinaldo's first words were:

"Where is Carmela?"

The only answer Joaquin made then, or at any time in the ensuing months, was: "Come and find out!"

Reinaldo stared broodingly at the young man, who but less than a year before had taken away his sister. On his face then had been the bloom of happy youth. The boy was still only twenty. But some fire had seared through him, and now there was in his face and bearing something as devoid of softness as chilled steel.

Despite anything Reinaldo could say or do to make him tell what had become of Carmela, Joaquin repeated only, "Come and find out."

Finally this youth of twenty wore down the war veteran. On the third day after Joaquin's arrival the two were off to California with only saddle baggage as traveling equipment.

All through the journey north Joaquin maintained a stubborn silence and Reinaldo finally fell in with his taciturnity. In this way the two traveled through wild country, slept under the same blanket by the light of fires to keep away wild animals, and ate the scantiest of meals until they grew haggard of flesh and taut of nerve.

Finally, outside of Hangtown, Joaquin broke silence.

"There is a price on my head here. We must wait for night before we enter town."

So they hid in the deserted mine where Joaquin had kept his lair when he was playing Nemesis to the thirteen who had been marked by him.

There was a slender crescent of moon that night and by the time the two men stole up to what was formerly Joaquin's shack, even the feeble light was overcast. The shack was in ruins now. Joaquin led Reinaldo to the site of what was once meant by Carmela to be a flower garden.

Here, over her grave, slowly, without outward emotion, he told Reinaldo the whole story, commencing with the robbing by the two Americans of his brother's chance at fortune, and ending with his flogging and the violation of Carmela.

Reinaldo had long divined of course, that his sister was dead. Now for the first time he learned how it was she died. The war-hardened man wasted no emotions on dramatics.

"Where are the men who did it?" he demanded.

Joaquin smiled. It must have been an absorbing smile to watch. The human face has engrossed the painters of all ages more than any other subject. A painter of the tiger passion in man would have thrilled at Joaquin's smile.

"Dead. Every one of them. Thirteen. You don't suppose I would leave this place without finishing the job?"

Reinaldo turned in fury on Joaquin.

"And you left nothing for me, her brother, to do?"

"A lover has prior claims," Joaquin replied. "But I have plenty for you to do. That is why I have brought you up here. I have settled our private account. Now let us go on.

"The Americanos have made war on us Mexicans and robbed us of soil. You as a veteran of the war will join me in a little private war of our own. I have sworn to get back a thousand dollars for every peso they have taken from me and mine. For every lash they've left on my body I must have a score of lives. They sank to beasts when they took Carmela as they did. I will not sink to their level and make war on their women. But let their men beware of me."

"You and I, Reinaldo, must carefully search and find others like us through whom we can recruit a band. Then we will begin our war. We will rob for wealth and we will kill for vengeance. We will grow from two to twenty; from twenty to a band of forty. When our exploits will have attracted to us all the men of iron who feel as we do, there will be hundreds of us.

"Long before then we shall have stolen one thousand horses. I want a rider for each horse. Then we will emerge, not as a band of occasional robbers, but as a devastating army; an army with vengeance and plunder as its goal. Are you with me, Reinaldo?"

"All right," Reinaldo said, after a brooding silence.

The two went to Marysville, where there were Mexicans drifting about in the gold fields. Joaquin felt it to be good recruiting ground for his band.

One night he was sitting alone in a saloon his eyes wandering. Suddenly they lit on another Latin sitting by himself at a table across the room. Around his whisky glass were curled only three fingers. Two were missing from his right hand. "Tres dedos,"—three fingered—Joaquin named him mentally. Then he wondered why he thought of him at all.

But he could not take his eyes or mind off the stranger. He had a face of the crudest South American Latin type. It was fascinating for the perfection with which every feature expressed cruelty. The eyes were long but scarcely showed between narrow slits of eyelids. The mouth had something of the look of some preying fish. The nostrils of his broken nose were thin and sensitive, a little dilated as though he were stealthily stalking his prey and already was scenting the warm blood.

In turn the stranger was fixedly regarding Joaquin. He, too, seemed fascinated. He must have seen in Joaquin's face the look of a killer like himself—and he read aright. There was this fundamental difference, however, between "Tres dedos" and Joaquin. The white hot passion that glittered in Joaquin's face was born of wrong, fancied or real. The cruelty in Tres dedos's came from a deeper source. He was born to it as any tiger or snake is born to claws or fangs.

The two men came together as naturally as steel and magnet. They found themselves drinking together and answering without hesitation the most searching questions any man could ask of another.

Joaquin found that Juan Tresdedos, as he was thereafter to be known, was a Chilean who had wandered from one South American revolution to another, solely, as he frankly confessed, because it gave him "deep pleasure" to fight. To shed "blood" would have better expressed it. Tresdedos eagerly fell in with Joaquin's plan for a great campaign of banditry.

"But which of us two will be the leader?" he asked. He looked the youthful Joaquin over critically.

Joaquin fixed his eyes on him.

"Let us decide that with horse and westling, revolver, musket, saber and cudulla," he replied. "We will fire at the same targets. We will race on horseback ten miles over roughest mountain country. With swords and cudullas we will fight each other. We will try only to see which is the better man. After all, we do not want to kill each other. But don't let that stay your hand from doing its best. For whichever of us wins will be the leader and the other must obey him abjectedly as any slave."

Tresdedos agreed.

They rode off to a wild valley and there engaged in the test for leadership. Easily Joaquin outrode and beat Tresdedos at marksmanship with revolver and musket, and won at wrestling.

Then on a level strip of grass they went at each other with swords. Tresdedos was a master at rough work. But Joaquin was a skilled fencer and art won against brute force. In ten minutes Joaquin had Tresdedos disarmed.

Their last round was with knives. They circled warily about, looking for an opening wherein to thrust the wicked Mexican cudulla. Tresdodos had a double advantage. The knife was the weapon of his class of fighter more than that of Joaquin's; and whereas Joaquin looked for only such an opening as would mark and temporarily disable Tresdedos, the other was not so particular.

His poisonous nature was aroused by his defeats and by the sight of a slight wound he had inflicted on Joaquin. The blood served to rouse Tresdedos's appetite for more. Forgotten was his interest in a band. What he felt was an immediate lust that had to be sated at once.

At a favorable moment he sprang past Joaquin's guard, whipped his heel in back of the youth's and hurled him to the ground, Tresdedos on top. Up flashed the Chilean's knife and for Joaquin's throat came the downthrust.

But the youth's nerves were quicker than his. With the break with which a wrestler whirls out of an opponent's hold, Joaquin twisted out just in time. Tresdedos's dagger grazed his neck and buried itself in the soil.

Before the Chilean could pluck it out he was hurled aside and now it was Joaquin who was astride Tresdedos and Joaquin's knife that was poised.

Into Tresdedos's side it went, just over the heart. But with a sudden twist the blade was sent not straight down, but sideways. Over Tresdedos's heart was a gash wide, but not deep.

Joaquin leaped to his feet.

"I could have driven it straight in," he said panting. "But I want you as my follower. Does my mark over your heart convince you?"

"I'm not a fool," growled Tresdedos.

Binding up each other's wounds they rode back to town and joined Reinaldo. The latter meanwhile had recruited a fourth man for their band, Luis Gonzales. When Joaquin first laid eyes on Gonzales a flush darkened his face. What did Reinaldo mean by letting himself be fooled? This man was not a Mexican but a hated Americano. For he had the blond face, eyes and hair of the Nordic; his Spanish had the hated accent of the American; his carriage and bearing were those of the American; his carriage and bearing were those of the race on whom Joaquin was organizing war.

But it turned out Gonzales was the child of a Mexican woman who had been outraged by an American. In every feature he had taken after his father. But in his heart, intensely Latin, there brooded hatred for his father and his father's race. Reinaldo pointed out that Gonzales would be priceless as a spy.

Statet of Marble

"Open the door, I will come in with you," he whispered and, when she hesitated: "Do as I tell you, please."

The hand that put the key into the lock trembled, but at last the key turned and the door swung open. A small night-light burned on the table of the wide panaled hall. On the left, near the foot of the stairs, only the lower steps of which were visible, Reeder saw a narrow door which stood open, and taking a step forward, saw that it was a tiny telephone-room.

And then a voice spoke from the upper landing, a deep, booming voice that he knew.

"Is that Miss Belman?"

Margaret, her heart beating faster, went to the foot of the stairs and looked up.

"Yes, Mrs. Welford."

"Good," said the deep voice. "Will you call the doctor—Circle 743—and tell him that Mr. Telfer has had a relapse—you will find the booth in the hall; shut the door behind you, the bell worries him."

Margaret looked at the detective and he nodded.

The woman upstairs wished to gain time for something—what?

The girl passed him; he heard the thud of the padded door close, and there was a click that made him spin around. The first thing he noticed was that there was no handle to the door, the second that the keyhole was covered by a steel disc, which he discovered later was felt-lined. He heard the girl speaking faintly, and put his ear to the keyhole.

"The lunatic—he can't open the door."

Without a second's hesitation he flew up the stairs, umbrella in hand, and as he reached the landing he heard a door close with a crash. Instantly he located the sound. It came from a room on the left immediately over the hall. The door was locked.

"Open this door," he commanded, and there came to him the sound of a deep laugh.

Mr. Reeder tugged at the stout handle of his umbrella. There was a flicker of steel as he dropped the lower end, and in his hand appeared six inches of knife blade.

The first stab at the panel sliced through the thin wood as though it were paper. In a second there was a jagged gap through which the black muzzle of an automatic was thrust.

"Put down that jug or I will blow your features into comparative chaos!" said Mr. Reeder pedantically.

The room was brightly lit, and he could see plainly. Mrs. Welford stood by the side of a big square funnel, the narrow end of which ran into the floor. In her hand was a huge enameled iron jug, and ranged about her were six others. In one corner of the room was a wide circular tank, and beyond, at half its height, depended a large copper pipe.

The woman's face turned to him was blank, expressionless.

"He wanted to run away with her," she said simply, "and after all I have done for him!"

"Open the door."

Mrs. Welford set down the jug and ran her huge hand across her forehead.

"Sidney is my own darling," she said. "I've nursed him, and taught him, and there was a moment—still in gold—in the time, that they shared alike."

She was talking of one of the ill-fated enterprises of Telfers Consolidated Trust—that sunken treasure ship to recover which the money of the company had been poured out like water. And she was mad. He had guessed the weakness of this domineering woman from the first.

"Open the door; we will talk it over. I'm perfectly sure that the treasure ship scheme was a sound one."

"Are you?" she asked eagerly, and the next minute the door was open and Mr. J. G. Reeder was in that room of death.

"First of all, let me have the key of the telephone-room—you are quite wrong about that young lady; she is my wife."

The woman stared at him blankly.

"Your wife?" A slow smile transfigured the face. "Why—I was silly. Here is the key."

He persuaded her to come downstairs with him, and when the frightened girl was released, he whispered a few words to her, and she flew out of the house.

"And now will you tell me how you knew—about the jugs?" he asked gently.

"John—that was my first husband—told me. He was a professor of chemistry and natural science, and also about the electric furnace. It is so easy to make if you have power—we use nothing but electricity in this house for heating and everything. And then I saw my poor darling being ruined through me, and I found how much money there was in the bank and I told Billingham to draw it and bring it to me without Sidney knowing. I sent Sidney away. I did everything—put the new lock on the telephone box and fixed the shaft from the roof to the little room—it was easy to disperse everything with all the doors

She was talking him about the improved furnace in the greenhouse when the police arrived with the divisional surgeon, and she went away with them, weeping because there would be nobody to press Sidney's ties or put out his shirts.

Mr. Reeder took the inspector up to the little room and showed him its contents.

"This funnel leads to the telephone box—" he began.

"But the jugs are empty," interrupted the officer.

Mr. J. G. Reeder struck a match and waiting until it burnt freely, lowered it into the jug. Half an inch lower than the rim the light went out.

"Carbon monoxide," he said, "which is made by steeping marble chips in hydrochloric acid—you will find the mixture in the tank. The gas is colorless and odorless—and heavy. You can pour it out of a jug like water. She could have bought the marble, but was afraid of arousing suspicion. Billingham was killed that way. She got him to go to the telephone box, probably closed the door on him herself, and then killed him painlessly."

"What did she do with the body?" asked the horrified officer.

"Come out into the hothouse," said Mr. Reeder, "and pray do not expect to see horrors; an electric furnace will dissolve a diamond to its original elements."

Mr. Reeder went home that night in a state of mental perturbation, and for an hour paced the floor of his large study in Brockley Road.

Over and over in his mind he turned one vital problem: did he owe an apology to Margaret Belman for saying that she was his wife?

Reckless

years must be all around us here. Mystery. Romance."

"Yes," he said. "I must show you the rock villages of the hinterland, and the Roman remains all along this coast."

He had promised Mrs. Resher to bring Gwendolen back before dark, which falls early at that time of year; so after a walk through San Remo's favorite promenade, the Corso dell'Imperatrice, and the purchase of souvenir cards for her friends in New York, they went back to their car and started for Monte Carlo.

"You must see all of Italy," Stephen said, "before you go back to America. You must see Florence in the spring when she's at her loveliest, and Rome, and Naples, and Venice. Venice is inconceivably beautiful—a city of dreams—almost unreal in the moonlight."

Turning suddenly, he surprised a look in Gwendolen's soft eyes which made his pulse beat faster. Then she flushed, turned her face away and looked out of the car window.

He was profoundly disturbed. A moment before they had been on the comfortable footing of pals, and now he wanted to kiss her.

He thought of Angela Drew.

"O, Lord!" he whispered the words without knowing it.

"What are you muttering about?"

He lied manfully, "I was wondering if I had gas enough in the tank."

But, of course, she would know he was lying. Now she would retreat from her self-betrayal into that shell of gay undifference where women hide themselves.

All right. They would both be safe—for a while—if they played that game.

She began an amusing recital of the efforts employed by the various buyers for Briggs's vast emporium to get more than their share of space in the advertising pages.

Just before they came to Cap Martin, they noticed a motor car laden with heavy luggage coming swiftly toward them around a bend of the road.

"Careless driving," Stephen growled, as he gave the oncoming car a wide space.

"That's funny," Gwendolen said, "do you see that bright green trunk? It's precisely like one of Mrs. Resher's. And the big gray trunk, too. Why . . ."

"Don't be silly," said Stephen. "There are lots of green trunks."

The car, with a veiled woman inside, passed them like the wind.

When they reached their hotel in Monte Carlo, Stephen sent his car to the garage and went to the desk with Gwendolen. He knew very well that bright green trunks were not common.

"A letter for Miss Pearson," said the clerk at the desk, gravely.

She took it, without a word.

Stephen followed her into a corner of the big ornate hall, and waited in silence while she stood there reading it.

"What is it?" he asked.

"My luck has turned," she answered, with a nervous laugh, as she handed him the letter. He read:

"My dear Gwendolen: I have just learned of the sudden illness of an old friend in Genoa, and I must start south immediately. Your bedroom is paid for until tomorrow.

"As you still have that thousand dollars which you won at roulette (lucky girl!) you had better go for a few days to a smaller hotel in the Condamine—say the Beau-Sejour—then take the first ship from Marseilles to New York.

"You have had a nice holiday, and with your winnings you will still have six or seven hundred dollars when you land on American shores.

"Good-by and good luck,

"Matilda Resher."

Stephen folded the letter slowly.

"May I borrow this document for a few hours?" he asked, looking her straight in the eyes.

"Yes. Why not?"

"If I may make a suggestion," he began . . .

"Oh, you can. Tell me what to do."

"You had better pack your trunk," he said, "have your dinner as usual, then wait in your room until I send up my name."

She nodded.

"Of course," he said, "you're not going back to America by the first boat. You'll stay here in a quiet hotel or pension, as long as you feel that you can afford to be idle. But don't make any plans for a few hours, and don't go outside the hotel—please."

Then, fearing that he had betrayed his anxiety, he added, "Don't go out, I mean, because I might come back sooner than I expect."

Gwendolen caught his arm, whispering excitedly:

"But why did she drop me like that, without even a word of apology—why?"

He shook his head. "I may as well tell you," he said, "that I'm rather skeptical about the sudden illness of that friend in Genoa."

"Oh!" Her eyes opened wider.

He smiled, patted her arm.

"Don't worry. They've known me in this hotel—in Monaco, too—since I was a boy of fifteen."

With Mrs. Resher's letter in his pocket, he walked swiftly away from the hotel.

It was nine o'clock that night when Gwendolen came downstairs to meet him. She had put on a simple evening gown of black gorgette. There was no touch of color about her but her glittering copper red hair and her red mouth.

They found a secluded corner, where they sat down side by side on a sofa. He remembered that he had come to Monte Carlo because he wanted to be among people who took chances. Well! This girl had taken a pretty stiff chance.

Before dinner he had passed an hour with his old friend, the Monagasque police official, and he had learned things about Mrs. Resher that would make Gwendolen Pearson's hair stand on end. How much should he tell her?

He began by saying, "There's a good vacant room in a pension de famille at Beausoleil, a few rods north of the Casino gardens—a house I know well. You had better engage the room by telephone, by and by. You can move in the morning. The hotel people here will send you in a car with your things."

He gave her the address and telephone number on a slip of paper. He did not say that he had already made everything easy for her by an interview with the manager of the Hotel de Paris.

She asked with a catch of her breath, "Have you found out anything about Mrs. Resher?"

He nodded. "But you're not involved in any way."

"Why . . . what do you mean?" Her eyes had a frightened look.

"Well," he hesitated, choosing his words, "Mrs. Resher was obliged to leave Monte Carlo. They didn't want trouble here which could get in the foreign newspapers. It had nothing to do with Rutherford Asham, I'm glad to say, nor with any other American; but a banker from Lyons whom she blackmailed here last winter has been out for her scalp. She had another girl with her last year, a beautiful Polish girl whom she called her companion."

"Good—heavens!" Gwendolen sat back on the sofa, staring at him. "Do you—think—she had a plan to use me—in some business like that?"

"I'm afraid so."

He did not tell her what he suspected, that Mrs. Resher had picked out Rutherford Asham as offering large possibilities of illegal revenue on account of his matrimonial tangle.

Gwendolen gasped, "But you must have thought me crazy, perfectly crazy,

Our Friends of the Chaparral

of the United States Department of Agriculture show that man has lost more battles with insects than he has won, to date. And why not? Man is only an infant antedated by insects by many eons. We have yet to determine our ability to rule and so after all, we had better watch our step. If the snakes and the carnivora had been as intelligent as the bees, the ants, beavers and elephants, man would have been annihilated long ago.

"Here in our chaparral many things are different than they are in the east. The growing period here is in the winter, during the rainy season. The shrubs and trees are evergreens, only a few of the trees drop their leaves in the winter, the sycamore, for instance. Our foothills and mountains are of a brown and somber tone in the summer but verdant green in the winter—just the opposite to the way it is in the east. Too, we have flowers growing on trees and acorns growing on bushes.

"And as it is with our flora so is it with our fauna. Most of our animal life is of an elfin stature. Also, the color of the fur of our animals is of a lighter tone because of the intense sunlight. The chaparral is the home of the largest bird that flies, the condor, as well as the smallest, the hummingbird. Here, too, we have the only hummingbird that sings, the Anna hummingbird.

"Our reptiles are different. Southern California is the home of the smallest snake known—the blind snake, no larger than an earthworm. Too, we have the only boa constrictors in North America—they are the dwarf boas known as the rosy boa and the rubber boa, both of them less than three feet in length but true boas. Near Saddle Peak in the Santa Monica Mountains, the coral snake is found, which according to all man-made rules is not supposed to be here. And we have six varieties of rattlesnake in the chaparral, including the sidewinder.

"One of the interesting things about this desert horned rattler is that if he is forced to remain in the direct rays of the sun when the temperature is 100 degrees or so he will die in ten minutes. And he is a desert snake! This is a strange country—strange trees, strange animals and strange climatic conditions and it is filled with wonders for him who has eyes to see."

WHITE LILACS

By Donald Wilhelm Hitch

Upon the altar of his heart, shrill Fear
Who once has seen white lilacs, nevermore
A place for things more lovely, though he do
Lays a hundred garden loves and rear
A harvesting of blooms whose pearls hold
Of purple twilights quivering with dew.
The scatters of the sunset's fires, and glow
While once has seen white lilacs crowned Love
A silent sweep glorious to blind his eyes,
A beauty lovelier to please his heart;
And though he tread the fields and seek the skies,
Find every silver stream and countryport,
He shall come back to lilacs whispering,
Beside a garden gate, pale lilacs white
Against the quiet stars—the loveliest poem
The gardens hand of God shall ever write!

"Lady!" Antonio groveled. Joaquin bobbed up and tore Teodosio down from the hand and wrung it. He pounded him heartily on the back. Joaquin was literally dancing. It is to his credit that he did not attempt to kiss Teodosio. He was overcome with joy at the prospect of getting his father out of jail.

"Pronto, pronto!" Teodosio said to Joaquin. "Get we are not ghosts! Hither you kill him or I do!"

Joaquin's face darkened. Teodosio

Stealer of Marble

the same purpose," murmured Mr. J. G. "She evidently makes—or—a collection of marble shavings. Nothing in her pocketbook?"

"Only the banknotes: they have the stamp of the Central Bank on their backs. We should be able to trace 'em easily."

Mr. Reeder returned to his office and, locking the door, produced a worn pack of cards from a drawer and played solitaire—which was his method of thinking intensively. Late in the afternoon his telephone bell rang, and he recognised the voice of Sergt. Mills.

"The notes were issued three months ago to Mr. Telfer," said the officer without preliminary, "and they were given by him to his housekeeper, Mrs. Watford."

"Oh, indeed?" said Mr. Reeder, quietly, and added, after reflection:

"And is 'Mrs. Jackson' that lady?" he asked.

"Yes. Telfer—poor little devil—nearly went mad when I told him she was under remand—dashed up to the jail in a taxi to identify her. The magistrate has granted bail, and she'll be bound over tomorrow. Telfer was bleating like a child—said she was mad. Gosh! that fellow is scared of her—when I took him into the waiting-room at the jail she gave him one look and he wilted. By the way, we have had a hint about Billingham that may interest you. Do you know that he and Telfer's secretary were very good friends.

"Really?"

"The chief has put Miss Selman under general observation; there may be nothing to it, but in cases like Billingham's it is very often a matter of charchan la femme!"

"Dear me!" said Reeder.

He was not in court when the marble stealer was sternly admonished by the magistrate and discharged. All that interested Mr. J. G. Reeder was to learn that the woman had paid the mason and had carried away her marble chips in triumph to the pretty house where Telfer lived.

She was the relict of a college professor, and had been left a widow after two years of marriage. She had then entered the service of Mrs. Telfer, the mother of Sidney, and had sole charge of the boy from his fourth year. When Mrs. Telfer died she had made the woman sole guardian of her youthful charge. So that Rebecca Watford had been by turns nurse and guardian, and was now in control of the young man's establishment.

The house occupied Mr. Reeder's attention to a considerable degree. It was

"The instrument is disconnected—I can't open the door."

Without a second hesitation he flew up the stairs, umbrella in hand, and as he reached the landing he heard a door close with a crash. Instantly he located the sound. It came from a room on the left immediately over the hall. The door was locked.

"Open this door," he commanded, and there came to him the sound of a deep laugh.

Mr. Reeder tapped at the steel handle with his umbrella, and then put his mouth to the keyhole.

"Open the door; I will talk it over. I'm perfectly sure that the treasure ship scheme was a sound one."

"Are you?" she asked eagerly, and the door—" he began.

"This funnel leads to the telephone in the room and showed him its contents. Mr. Reeder took the inspector up to the third furnace in the greenhouse when the police arrived with the divisional surgeon, and she went away with them, weeping because there would be nobody to press Sidney's ties or put out his shirts.

There was a million—all in gold—in the ship. But they robbed him."

She was talking of one of the ill-fated enterprises of Telfers Consolidated Trust—that sunken treasure ship to recover which the money of the company had been poured out like water. And she was mad. He had guessed the weakness of this dominering woman from the first.

"Are you quite sure that the ship—that you—" she began.

"Sure?" she asked eagerly, and the door—" he began.

"This funnel leads to the telephone in the room and showed him its contents. Mr. Reeder took the inspector up to the third furnace in the greenhouse when the police arrived with the divisional surgeon, and she went away with them, weeping because there would be nobody to press Sidney's ties or put out his shirts.

Mr. Reeder took the inspector up to the open and an electric fan working on the floor—"

She was telling him about the improvements she had made in the garden and that she had taken them from the yard of a monument mason in the Euston Road. She made a frank statement to the effect that she had broken open a gate into the yard and filled the suit case without the mason's knowledge.

The magistrate leaned back in his chair and scrutinised the charge sheet with a frown.

"There is no address against her name," he said.

"She gave an address, but it was false, Your Honor—she refuses to offer any further information."

Mr. J. G. Reeder had screwed round in his seat and was staring open-mouthed at the prisoner. She was tall, broad-shouldered and stoutly built. The hand that rested on the rail of the dock was twice the size of any woman's hand he had ever seen. The face was modelled largely, but though there was something in her appearance which was almost repellent, she was handsome in her large way. Deep-set brown eyes, a nose that was large and masterful, a well-shaped mouth and two chins—these in profile were not attractive to one who had his views on beauty in women, but Mr. J. G. Reeder, being a fair man, admitted that she was a fine-looking woman. When she spoke it was in a voice as deep as a man's, sonorous and powerful.

"I admit it was a fool thing to do. But the idea occurred to me just as I was going to bed and I acted on the impulse of the moment. I could well afford to buy the stone."

"Is that true?" and, when the officer answered, the magistrate turned his suspicious eyes to the woman. "You are giving us a lot of trouble because you will not tell your name and address. I can understand that you do not wish your friends to know of your stupid theft, but unless you give me the information, I shall be compelled to remand you in custody for a week."

She was well, if plainly, dressed. On one large finger flashed a diamond which Mr. Reeder mentally priced in the region of a thousand dollars. "Mrs. Jackson" was shaking her head as he looked.

"I can't give you my address," she said, and the magistrate nodded curtly.

"Remanded for inquiry," he said, and added, as she walked out of the dock: "I should like a report from the prison doctor on the state of her mind."

Mr. J. G. Reeder rose quickly from his chair and followed the woman and the officer in charge of the case through the little door that leads to the cells.

"Mrs. Jackson" had disappeared by the time he reached the corridor, but the detective-sergeant was stooping over the large and handsome suit case that he had shown in court and was now laying on a bench.

Most of the outdoor men of the C.I.D. knew Mr. J. G. Reeder, and Sergt. Mills grinned a cheerful welcome.

"What do you think of that one, Mr. Reeder? It is certainly a new one on me! Never heard of a kombetoce artist being burgled before."

He opened the top of the case, and Mr. Reeder ran his fingers through the marble chips.

"The case and the loot weighs over a hundred pounds," said the officer. "She must have the strength of a navvy to carry it. The poor officer who carried it to the station was hot and melting when he arrived."

Mr. J. G. was inspecting the case. It was a handsome article, the hinges and locks being of oxidised silver. No maker's name was visible on the inside, or owner's initials on the glossy lid. The lining had once been of silk, but now hung in shreds and was white with marble dust.

"Yes," said Mr. Reeder absently, "very interesting—most interesting. Is it permissible to ask whether, when she was searched, any—er—documents—?" The sergeant shook his head. "Or unusual possession?"

"Only these."

By the side of the case was a pair of large gloves. These also were soiled, and their surfaces cut in a hundred places.

"These have been used frequently for drink.

Mr. Reeder waited until she had paid the fare and the cab had gone, and then, as she walked toward the gate, he stepped from the shadow.

"Oh!—Mr. Reeder, how you frightened me!" she gasped. "I am going to see Mr. Telfer—he is dangerously ill—no, it was his housekeeper who wrote asking me to come at once."

"Did she now! Well, I will ring the bell for you."

She told him that that was unnecessary—she had the key which had come with the note.

"She is alone in the house with Mr. Telfer, who refuses to allow a trained nurse near him," said Margaret, "and—"

"Will you be good enough to lower your voice, young lady?" urged Mr. Reeder, in an impressive whisper. "Forgive the impertinence, but if our friend is ill—"

"He couldn't hear me," she said, but spoke in a lower tone.

"So many sick people are very sensitive to the human voice. Tell me, how did this letter come?"

"From Mr. Telfer? By messenger an hour ago."

Nobody had been in the house or left it—except Sidney. And Sidney, in his mad fear, would carry out any instructions which his wife gave to him.

"And did it contain a message like this?" Mr. Reeder considered a moment. "'Bring this letter with you'?"

"No," said the girl in surprise, "but

NEW YORK, Sept. 1. (AP)—Simon Straus, noted financier and head of the house of S. W. Straus & Co., died at his home in this city early today after a long illness. He had been ill for more than a year.

Generally recognized as the originator of the modern first mortgage real estate bond, he was one of the pioneers in aiding the development of the American skyscraper. His company financed and sold bonds on many of the country's most widely known buildings, and his plan for safeguarding investing public.

STARTED IN CHICAGO

Mr. Straus started his career in Chicago, Ill., in 1882. He was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1861, and after he graduated from Cornell University in 1882 he moved to Chicago. Later he moved to New York.

Soon after coming to the metropolis he organized the firm of S. W. Straus & Co., which he headed until his death. He was also president of the Straus Building Corporation, which owns and operates the Straus Building, 565 Fifth Avenue.

He was the first known as J. W. Straus & Co., and was engaged in the business of taking over the mortgages on properties and selling them to investors.

Upon the organization of the American Mortgage Company in 1906, after a period of financial depression, the business was continued in this country. It was founded in London in 1865 and operated in this country for 40 years. It was merged with the S. W. Straus & Co. in 1913 and devoted the rest of his time to that organization.

Mr. Straus was a member of the Union League Club in Chicago and engaged actively in civic affairs. He was a member of the Chicago Board of Education from 1898 to 1902, and was president of the Board of Trustees of the Northwestern University.
